WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

Last spring I got kind o' nervous;
My system, in fact, got run down,
And my doctor advised me to purchase
Some nice little place out of town;
Country breezes would be beneficial—
Change of air I've been much good—
And so, after weighing the matter,
I concluded, at last, that I would.

At length, after days spent in searching
And scouring the country around,
I beat little cottage to suit me
In a nice little village I found;
With alacrity then I proceeded
This rare one to engage,
And my good wife and I were as merry
As two mated birds in a cage.

The mornings, ah! they were so lovely!
The birds they so merrily sung!
And the roses, they blocked up our doorway,
And over our front windows hung!
Such pleasure! such pure satisfaction!
It was more than I'd dared to expect;
And the neighbors—the owner had told me—
The neighbors were very select.

The air it was cool and inspiring;
I no longer felt nervous and weak;
I relished my cheerful meat beefsteak,
And the color came back to my cheek;
I grew hearty, and healthy, and ruddy,
I felt as—I think I know when,
And my spirits, and wit, and stories and stories
Flowed freely and fast from my pen.

But by and by the short evenings grow warmer
And laden with heat is the air,
And the voice of that Thug—the mosquito—
Is heard in his terrible lair:
Tired out with the long days of summer,
When the red sun sinks down in the west,
I seek in my chamber's recesses
My couch—and retire to rest.

Bed? I've fumed and I've sworn thro' the day time—
But my troubles they yet are to come!
My head has but just touched my pillow
When I hear the wild roll of a drum;
My next neighbor is cursed with an offspring
(The day he was born he will rue),
And at night, there he sits on the doorstep
And beats that infernal tattoo!

Then the wife of my opposite neighbor
Has a whimsical fancy that she
Can pipe like a Patti or Nilsson
(She sang at the peace jubilee);
Every night at that dismal piano
She howls like a cat in a fit—
While I lay a-shaking and trembling
And praying her wilson may split.

And two or three houses above me—
Pretty near at the top of the hill—
Dwells a monster, who, if I should meet him,
It will be my ambition to kill!
"Home, sweet home!" My home he has ruined!
"Annie Laurie" he's brained with a blow
From that devilish brazen invention
Whose name I'm not anxious to know!

Three youths—I should say idiotic—
A-ranging from twelve to eighteen,
Prowl about, armed with villainous clappers,
Accordeon and cracked tamborine,
And with fierce, energetic vehemence
At these infernal wild instruments tug,
And shriek, with shrill voices discordant,
Words in praise of a "little brown jug."

When I pitched my abode near the depot
I thought how convenient 'twould be—
I wish it was now to the devil,
Or much, much farther than three!
For the whistles, it's ten thousand will cable,
They go like a knife through my head,
And the shouts of the strong-lunged conductors
Are enough to awaken the dead!

But on this I will only touch gently—
In fact, do not wish to complain,
I will not be hard on the whistles,
Conductors, or engines, or train;
But at night the pay youths of this village,
Of all sizes—the little and big—
Assemble upon that broad platform
And unite in one general jig.

And when they get tired of swearing
And doing this innocent thing,
They take some fresh "chaw" of tobacco—
And—ah! shall I say it?—they sing!
Some howl that they're "Marching through Georgia!"
Some if "ever" they "cease to love;"
Such sounds, my dear readers, were never heard
On earth or in heavens above!

And that awful brass band of the village,
Whose members so wickedly meet,
Committing murder and calling it music,
A little way down the street!
Ah! above those sounds diabolic
I can hear the fierce trombone,
And I hide my head under the bed clothes
And groan, and groan, and groan!

I will not allude to the minor
Disturbances made by the bats—
Of the howling of dogs of all ages,
Of the amorous wailing of cats;
The diversified species of insects
With all manner of legs and of wings—
That come from all manners of places,
And sting with all manners of stings!

To sum up—the result of it all is
That twisting and turning I keep,
And it's four o'clock in the morning
Before I can get any sleep;
I've grown thinner and paler than ever,
And I look like a ghost in the race.
I will pack up my lares and my penates
And fly from this terrible place!

Where law prevails—to the city—
Where you can all nuisances stop;
Where, if a ruffian disturbs your peace,
He is seized by a vigilant cop;
Can't I sell you this nice little cottage,
Its roses and clambering vine?
The one with "FOR SALE" in the window,
And the green lawn in front—that is mine. J. H. B.

WON IN THE AIR;

OR,

THE ROPE WALKER AND THE LADY.

BY JAMES O'NEALE COOKE.

Some years before anybody thought that King William of Prussia would become Emperor of Germany, there was a Grand Imperial Circus in that country, which, travel where it might, was sure to attract thousands of people. It was an extensive establishment—something like American or English mammoth circuses—gave a miscellaneous entertainment, combining the performances of men and women, and had a splendid menagerie attached to it, besides some of the cleverest athletes in the world, not to forget a wonderful rope-dancer or walker, known as Mons. Achille Dartois.

Among the several places visited were Baden—where it made a prolonged stay—the good folks of that city favoring it very much. The Grand Duke and his family were its liberal patronisers; so, too, what were called the "high people," the less distinguished following, as a matter of course.

The Mons. Achille Dartois referred to, beside being a very Crichton at his trade, was a remarkably handsome and accomplished young man. Many persons wondered at his being a mere itinerant professional—a "common rope-walker," as it were—evidently passed—until applied of the very liberal income he derived from his displays. That was far in advance of the fortunes of many men who might have been picked out of a crowd of nobles then in Baden, with aristocratic names, titles over sixteen letters long, and heraldic quarterings of twice that amount. There was one thing, however, connected with Mons. Achille Dartois that nobody wondered at. It was the high praise he had gained in the opinion of all the visitors to the "Grand Imperial," in that of the rare talent he displayed—the special esteem, we may add, in which he stood with the ladies. In Baden, at that date, there was a whole bevy of these proud dames with distinguished husbands, and younger ladies, noble themselves, and destined to wed nobly. Notwithstanding, Mons. Achille Dartois never made his appearance without some of these fair ladies and thinking of him with admiration and ardency of feeling that might have blushed at if fully interpreted to them in the privacy o their own chambers.

There was then in Baden, on a visit, a very stately gentleman—Don Francisco Merrielles, a general in the Army of Queen Isabella. He was of a tall, upright figure—had a martial look and walk, and had seen much service, as the numerous stars, crosses and medals on his regimental coat attested. He had been widowed many years, and had but one child, a daughter, known as Donna Clara, who had accompanied her father to Baden. There was a good deal of talk about the old soldier and the young lady—some of the gossips saying that the former was traveling for the sake of his health, and had brought his daughter with him, that she might "see the world," as the parase goes; others being equally positive, that the lady being of marriageable age, her father was visiting but to grand cities, so that she might, with his sanction, select a fitting suitor for her hand. This was all conjecture, however, but there could be no conjecture about one thing—the extreme loveliness of Donna Clara. She was of the European Hygeian order of beauty, with golden brown hair, a complexion of delicately mingled white and red, seraphic eyes of blue, and exquisitely cut features; with a form, too, which a Canova would have gloried in transferring to marble for some new Venus. She and her father were frequent visitors at the circus where Mons. Achille Dartois was engaged, and among the most liberal of his applauders. By a coincidence trifling enough in itself, but remarkable, as will be seen from its connection with the great incident of this little history, the Merrielles and the rope-dancer were lodged in two exactly opposite hotels.

It often happened in the day time that the Merrielles would be sitting at their windows when Achille appeared upon the street. Then be sure that the eyes of the young lady would follow him admiringly, while the old soldier, gazing on him, too, would make some remark of a complimentary nature, in regard to the Frenchman,—such, for example, as:—"A very fine young man, and were I in active service once more I should be pleased to have him for one of my lieutenants." These words could but fall pleasantly on the sense of Donna Clara, who really reciprocated the wish, that her gallant sire was once again at the head of a regiment, she living in barracks with him, and Mons. Achille doing military duty there.

We are writing about a time when the feat of walking the rope in the open air, at a great height, was in the first flush of its novelty in the places where it had been practised at all—when, in Germany, at least in Baden, it had never been witnessed. It was, however, soon to be witnessed there, and Mons. Achille Dartois was the performer who would essay the perilous feat—the occasion being a kind of carnival, to be held on behalf of an old public institution of the city, on the funds of which there had been extraordinary demands of late.

The novelty to which the good people of Baden were about to be treated for the first time in their lives was pretty widely discussed as soon as announced, and it was really amusing to hear what was said about it. With the majority of persons it found high favor, and the certainty that Mons. Achille would pass through it triumphantly; others had grave doubts on that point, and allowing for a slip (not between the cup and the lip, but between the sky and the earth), expressed the sorrow they should feel if any harm happened to "so handsome and clever a gentleman." There was a third party, composed of persons similar to those who decried balloons in their infancy, who, poor simple souls, were evidently of the opinion that the announced performance was a sort of tempting of Providence, and would inevitably end in something terrible!

But all the fine doings advertised came off, and there was a goodly return of the "needful" that had been sought. The feat of Mons. Achille Dartois gave general satisfaction—we might say delight. The rope he walked extended from one building to another exactly opposite, both being of equal height, his start being made from the hotel in which the Spaniard and his daughter resided, while his rest or "home" was the hotel where he himself was lodged. His achievement was much talked of, and a great deal was also written in the local newspapers about it, for Blondin had not been heard of then in Baden, nor the feat of walking the rope in the open air been witnessed in that place.

The performance of the handsome and intrepid Frenchman was watched with a general look of alarm by the people below, whatever might have been the dread forebodings of a few there. But on how slender a thread did Mons. Achille's life then depend! The slightest uncertainty of vision, the least hesitation in tread, an overbalancing to even a straw's weight—and the daring fellow would have been instantly precipitated to the ground, there to be reduced to a horrible and blood-stained mass! Expert and confident as he was, and often as he had successfully tried the feat, this, at least, was his chance; and, as it may be surmised, there were a few among his lookers-on who reflected on this contingency, and shuddered over it. There was one who did so very much—whose cheeks, too, turned pale, whose eyes were fixed on every movement of the athlete, and never closed until they saw that he was safe; whose heart and every pulse beat with a strong and rapid motion, and who, when the cheers of the people proclaimed the Frenchman's triumph, uttered in the soft, musical language of her own beautiful land of song and chivalry, the apostrophe—"Thank God!" and sank, almost fainting, in her chair. It was Donna Clara, whose father (gallant old gentleman as he was), joined in the general cheer of the people outside—one of those cheers that no man not obtuse in soul can hear without deep emotion!

As a matter of course, Mons. Achille Dartois, after the brilliant completion of his perilous undertaking, came to be a greater favorite with the good people of Baden than ever. The German noble, with his many-syllabled name and as numerously quartered shield, is proverbially a proud man—so, too, is the Spanish hidalgo and high military officer; notwithstanding, there were some German nobles then in Baden who did not feel a sort of pride in taking the rope-dancer by the hand; while so far as regards Don Francisco, it might have been said, that if his previous desire had been that Achille should be one of his lieutenants, his present pointed to him as one of his captains at least. Then there was Donna Clara—what had been, what were the feelings of that lovely daughter of Castile towards the handsome Frenchman? Who among our readers will be at a loss to answer this question?

Three days had passed since the doings we have been writing about. It was night, and the streets of Baden presented a very different aspect from the one they had shown on the occasion of the recent gala. There, a bright moon was high in the blue heavens, throngs of people were abroad, streamers rose and fell in the gently stirring air, bands of music discoursed in the different streets, and the hum of cheerful conversation was heard wherever you went. But the scene was changed. An almost entire silence wrapped the streets, and save from a few windows, no lights at all were visible. The air was balmy, and a moon near to full shone down from an unclouded sky. For what a stray wanderer of the highways then saw and heard, human life in Baden might have been reduced to a startling minimum, though taking what he did not see, it was still multiform and flush; for many a gaming saloon was thronged at that midnight hour by men and women, whose hearts, looks and fortunes were on the pin whose features gave eloquent token of what was passing in their souls, and whose fine clothes, gold and jewels were in fit keeping with the beauties of fresco painting, with gilding, crystal, velvet carpets, silken hangings, sparkling wines and blushing fruits!

In those places the people were variously disposed—some at card playing, some at dice throwing, others were idly lounging, or lesting the rare of the rich things spread before them. Here and there were green covered tables, on which were displayed piles of crisp bank notes and rouleties of rosy gold.

So much for an interior view. Outside again it is possible the wayfarer may bend his course towards the quarter where the old Spanish soldier, his lovely daughter and her secret adorer, Achille Dartois, are lodged. White and brilliant are the lights of the two buildings, and very impressive the signs of life in repose there presented. The eye of the wanderer is attracted to something above the two roofs, and crossing from one to the other. It is the rope on which Achille walked the day of the carnival; it has not yet been removed, and viewed from the street, has the appearance of a thin, dark line drawn across the glowing blue sky.

All stirless, all quiet; but not for long. Suddenly there is an odor of fire, then the appearance of flame; then the loud exclamation of the word "FIRE!" itself; with the quick presence on the streets and at the windows, of people in different stages of dress; then the tolling of bells, confused cries, the rattling of engine wheels over the stones, and a compact crowd around one of the two high buildings opposite each other, and between which the athlete's rope is yet stretched. Then (merciful Heavens!) what an outburst of flame! what fears that many there will perish in it!

But early advised of the disaster, and acquainted with the ample means of egress and ingress with which the hotel is furnished, all save one person escape. The one left is a woman, and has her apartment on an upper floor. She has been sleeping soundly, and when she awakes, it is to find herself enveloped in a dense smoke, through which the approaching flame shows itself. Poor Donna Clara (for 'tis none save she), how terrible is her strait! She realises it to the full, and with one loud, piercing shriek, falls prone upon the floor!

Meanwhile, upward are the people in the street looking, the entire hotel being threatened with destruction, and the lurid flame mounting higher, higher every moment, as though the work of ruin should be crowned lofuly. "Higher yet!" exclaimed a man in the crowd, which was swaying to and fro fearfully, and sending up its confused murmurs, and he was about to say something more, when there fell a sudden hush on him and those around him, and all their hearts seemed to stand still!

A man was on the rope! no other man than Achille Dartois, and in a little fuller costume than he had retained when the alarm was first sounded. He had given one look, had comprehended the imminent peril of the woman he loved, and guided by her shrieks, was in the way to save her or himself perish with her! With a nerve that outrivaled the nerve he had disquayed three days before —with perils environing him which put to the blush all former perils on that rope, he slowly but surely made his way to the opposite buildings. When he landed safely there and disappeared there was a breath of relief, a momentary closing of the o'er wearied eyes of the people below: but no speech, not a word! Presently he came in sight again—this time with the form of the insensible Donna Clara in his arms! A few moments, and he was on the rope once more! Then came his peril of perils. Higher and higher the flames were soaring, and might scorch him and the fair creature he carried! Then there were the chances of a false step, a dazzled sight, an overbalancing, a momentary loss of nerve! But no! all has escaped, and no longer the rope dancer, but the hero, Achille Dartois, landed himself and her he bore in perfect safety!

Description pales before anything like that which immediately ensued. There was such a shout, if shout it could be called, that seemed to have come from all the congregated millions of our globe, and to be rippling up the very stones of Baden's streets. No wonder that people, hearing that shout—waking suddenly to it, and seeing the sky all a flame at the time, should have asked in trembling expostation of receiving an affirmative in reply:—"Is this the Judgment Day?"

The poor old Spaniard! He had been out late visiting, and was returning to his hotel when the fire was at its utmost. Instinctively, he would have pressed forward, seeking the rescue of his child, but the crowd was too dense for him. He saw, like the people near him, the work of Achille, and then, till the ending, was in a condition of semi-asphyxia, so far as bodily movements or manifestations were concerned. But he had only to see his daughter and her preserver safe, to yield to nature's re-action at once, by fainting. Had he not done so, the tension on his heart strings would have been too much, his heart itself would have burst.

* * * * * * *

Three months later, scene Paris, characters first introduced, Don Francisco Merrielles, Donna Clara and Mr. George Freeman, an American. Father and daughter had sat up pretty late, and had been talking seriously; the old gentleman, in the intervals of his speech, puffing at a most fragrant cigar.

"Yes, my dear," he said, addressing his lovely offspring; "you do well to remind me that Achille will be here in a few days according to special agreement, and will then expect a definite answer from me on a subject closest to his heart, on which both you and he sounded me before we left Baden. He shall have that answer, for I have promised him, and with me, as I hope with every Spanish gentleman and officer, a promise is always held sacred."

Donna Clara's answer to this was looked more than spoken, and it told all, to the end, that if her father, from pride of rank or prejudice of caste, refused to do what she desired he should, there would then be only one person to consult in the business—herself.

That night, Don Francisco Merrielles sat in his rocking-chair, smoking his cigar, in his handsome Parisian hotel, long after Donna Clara had retired to rest. Achille Dartois would be with them in a few days, and then was to be decided on the point of the old Spaniard's consent to a union with his daughter. Notwithstanding the immense debt of gratitude he owed to the rope-dancer, Don Francisco had met the first advances of the young man, backed as they were by the expressed love of Clara, with something like scorn and anger; later, however, he had sobered down a little, and now, over his cigar, at the time and in the place particularized, he was actually angered with himself on the "possibility" of his consenting to receive one who had been a public performer—"a mere rope dancer" his son-in-law; for be it understood, that Achille, finding himself wealthy enough (he had made large sums by trading stocks) to live without labor, and desirous, all the while, of conciliating the old gentleman's punctilios, had retired from the circus.

"I have it!" exclaimed Don Francisco, suddenly starting up, and throwing aside his but half smoked cigar. "I'll speak to Freeman about it, and hear what he says in reply."

This Freeman was an American gentleman of culture and fortune, then on his travels—middle aged, and of a most happily balanced disposition. He had made the acquaintance of the Merrielles immediately on their arrival in Paris from Baden, and was almost a daily visitor of theirs. It was an odd admixture—a Spanish noble and general officer, full of the pride of title, rank, family and tradition, and a plain citizen of the Yankee republic; nevertheless, the two men viewed in each other enough to esteem—true, too, that the elder was willing to be influenced, in a matter touching himself sorely, by the counsels of the younger.

Freeman had heard only the outlines of the story about the Baden fire, but when it came to be revealed to him in all its fullness of detail, he at once gave his vote for the marriage of the young people—throwing in several warm "Americanisms" by the way, and finishing off by the declaration that "such a man" (meaning Achille Dartois) "in the United States would be run for president, sure."

We have but little to add. Achille came, saw his beloved and her father, was introduced to Freeman, and married in a few days. This may be called the regular termination of our story.

But we have a little addenda, or postscript, which will not detain the reader long:—

Twelve years have passed away since the events here related and all our characters still live—Don Francisco, a long way down the decline of life, but yet of upright and martial bearing, and able to fight his battles o'er again—that is, over his bottle of fine old port; Achille and Donna Clara, the parents of several lovely children, and themselves in the prime of their life and beauty; Freeman, if possible, an improvement on the model gentleman he was a dozen years ago, and perhaps entertaining an idea of his own nomination for the presidency of the United States at some future date.

As for the "Grand Imperial Circus," but for which we should never have told this story, that is—to use an American phrase—"running" yet; and so nothing beside; its proprietors make the boast of its having, since the war with France, been visited by the Emperor William, his great military leaders, and Bismarck himself!

MISS AMY SHERIDAN, Burlesque Actress.

OUR PORTRAIT GALLERY.

MISS AMY SHERIDAN.

This lady is a native of England, and made her first appearance on the stage at the St. James' Theatre, London, in 1861, as Blanche, in "The Games of Kemps." Some time since she won some favor by her performance of Lady Godiva, at Astley's. She came to America a few months since and joined the Lydia Thompson burlesque troupe, of which she still continues a member.

MARRIAGE STATISTICS OF CELEBRITIES.—Shakespeare married at the age of 18; Dante, Franklin and Bulwer at 24; Kepler, Mozart, Burk and Scott at 26; Washington, Napoleon I., and Byron at 27; Rossini's first marriage took place when he was 20 years old—his second at the age of 54; Schiller and Weber married in their 31st years; Chaucer at the age of 32; Wordsworth at 34; Aristophanes at 36; Wellington at 37; Jean Paul at 38; Talma at 39; Martin Luther at 42; Addison at 44; Young at 47; Surio at 49; Buffon at 55; Goethe at the mature age of 57.

A DECEASED WIDOW.—Upon a tombstone in the cemetery of Landaff is this inscription:—

"Widow Susanna Brownson, was born Aug. 3, 1699, and died June 13, 1803, aged 103 years.

Here lies decreased in mankind,
To God her spirit she resigned."

It will be seen by the above record that the deceased lived in three centuries, a circumstance perhaps without parallel in New England.

SOLID MEN TO THE FRONT.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY "DOBBS."

Solid men to the front, they're the ones we are seeking,
We want them in city, in county and state;
In the national hall, where once giants were speaking,
Endowed with each honorable virtue and trait.
We want men who care naught for the chains of a party
Whose good name will ward off every lie and affront,
Whose love for their country is honest and hearty,
Who will really be—solid men to the front.

Solid men to the front—demagogues to the rear;
In this great hive of freedom there must be no drones;
For the country that patriots cherish so dear,
The poorest among us some interest owns.
Then look to the men who the standard must bear,
And for frauds of all parties keep well on the hunt,
Then the rank and the file all the glory will share
With their leaders—the good solid men to the front.

Solid men to the front for each place and position,
Select well each man for his merit and worth,
No matter for riches or previous condition,
And throw over for once the distinction of birth;
Let statesmen, not demagogues, manage the nation—
Of the labors and honors let them bear the brunt—
Proud then we'll be of our country's high station,
And rejoice that we placed—solid men to the front.

"IN HIS SHOES."

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY S. A. M.

I think I have heard you say, "I wish I were in his shoes;" and I think I have seen something like a look of envy in your eyes as you watched the stately equipage of some favored one roll by. I am "in his shoes," and will tell you how I came here; for I have plenty of time to write now. The twelve months that have passed since I, figuratively speaking, became the occupant of his pedestrial accoutrements seem like a long dream. The sudden transitions from place to place, and from safety to danger, have been as strange and fitful as the workings of my dream.

I used to be a strolling writer—Bohemian writers I think they call us—one of those literary "tramps" whose genius has the happy faculty of conforming to circumstances; one of those fellows who manage for authorship extends from the writing of a funeral dirge in memory of the dead to the composing of a midnight drinking song of the living. How and then one of our number would "make a hit," which would result in his moving up-town and sporting a new "timer;" and what jolly gatherings we used to have at his rooms in honor of the occasion! Then, all of a sudden, we would find him back again in his old fourth-story room, back stairway, and while we were "shipping in" to raise enough to redeem his watch which he had deposited "just round the corner," our jokes flowed as freely as when we were making merry over his good fortune.

One night, as I was sitting in my room, lamenting a streak of bad luck which seemed to have befallen me, and, as I was conning over an idea which, if properly worked up, might result in satisfying the immediate demands of my landlady, I heard some one coming up the stairway with a heavy, irregular tread. The sound came nearer and soon a form fell heavily against my door. I opened the door and, as I did so, what a sight met my gaze! I saw the face of a man, besmeared with powder and horribly disfigured. A consciousness of my presence seemed to come over him; for he tried to speak, but his voice died out in a low gurgle, his eyes became set in their sockets and seemed to be looking into eternity, his limbs stiffened and I saw that he was dead. I dragged him into my room and was about to run for assistance, when a voice seemed to say to me: "Who be the murderer? I can prove it!" What, was I not? Then I stopped and thought. I saw that suspicion must rest upon me and I knew that I was unable to prove myself innocent of a crime of which circumstantial evidence would strongly declare me to be guilty. The thought of these fearful consequences gave me courage to coolly do what I have often wondered how I dared to do. I dragged the body in to my room at first further and locked the door. Then I darkened the w'n'ow and proceeded to search the pockets of the murdered man for some clue as to who he might be. I found in his inside coat pocket a diary, which bore on its fly leaf the name and address, "Geo. Burridge, Esq., London." Between the leaves were about $400 in bank notes and a draft on the bank of England for some since she won some favor by her performance of £1,000. In another place I found a letter addressed to some persons in Paris, and within the envelope I was startled to find what I, at first thought to be a photograph of myself; yet this could not be, for on the back of the card was the signature:—"Truly yours, Geo. Burridge." I know not what spirit of evil directed me, but suddenly there flashed across my mind a way of escape from the dreadful suspicions which I knew would rest upon me as the result of the improbable story of a dying man staggering against my door. So I coolly went to work and examined the face of the dead man. The fearful mutilation and the powder marks, gave evidence of self-destruction. This was a point in my favor. Then began the most fearful experience of my life. I dressed myself in the murdered man's clothes, which were but little stained with blood, and clothed him in my own garments. I laid him in such a position as he would naturally have fallen, and laid my revolver in the bloody pool by his side. I then went to my desk and wrote in a trembling hand—I did not have to counterfeit that—a note which read as follows:—"It's all up, boys; there is no use playing this game any longer. For reasons they can never know I have been led to this cowardly extrist from life. Good by, J. De V."

I left this note on my desk, then noiselessly crept down the stairs. What visions of evil thronged around me! How every creak of the old stairs seemed like the voice of some demon come to accuse me! I walked along the silent streets, and, having entered a hotel registered myself as "Geo. Burridge, Esq., London." When I had locked myself in my room I proceeded to examine the contents of my pockets. In one of them I found a worn envelope which contained nothing but a yellow piece of paper closely folded; and, upon opening this, I found it to be written over in a strange kind of cipher. Not being in a mood for working out problems of this kind, I folded it and replaced it in the pocket, noticing as I did so the words written on the back of the envelope, "Via della Corso, 27." In one of the vest pockets I found an ivory miniature cased in velvet. The picture was that of a girl, apparently not more than eighteen and of rare beauty. Beneath the portrait and scratched upon the ivory with some sharp instrument were the words "Je suis soir amie toujours." After indulging in all sorts of strange fancies concerning the story of the picture and the meaning of the writing in cipher on the yellow paper, I retired and lay in a half conscious state till morning. During the next day I closely kept my room, and at night read in the evening papers that John Waterman, a Bohemian writer, who wrote under the signature of "J. De V.," had been guilty of death by his own hand. That night I ventured out and strolled around towards my old room, and there I saw a dim light burning, but heard no sound. I came back to my hotel and slept but little. During the forenoon of the next day I saw a hearse of no grand pretensions slowly wind along the street, and in the three carriages that followed it I noticed my old friends who had "chipped in" to do this last sad duty to one more of the brotherhood of strolling writers. Then it was, if never before, that I realized that I was, henceforth and forever, beyond all ability to prove to the contrary, Geo. Burridge, Esq., London. I was literally "in his shoes."

That night I was awakened by the consciousness that I was not alone in my room. There, by the dim light of the gas, which was partly turned on, I saw the form of a man, with dark, piercing eyes, holding in one hand the yellow paper on which was the cipher writing, and in the other glistened the barrel of a revolver which he slightly elevated as he said, "Monsieur need not fear; this weapon is only for self-defence. Monsieur's life is too valuable to be wasted; for he is the only man living who can read this paper." Terrified, I told him to let me take the paper and I would read every word it contained. When he gave it to me I began, as if reading, to relate the way in which certain letters could be found, thinking that I might, accidentally, hit upon some information which would satisfy him for the present. But he interrupted me, saying, "Monsieur need not try to deceive me in that way; for he well knows that the ciphers must be read in Italian and that it tells where the parchment may be found. I will not be hard with Monsieur, only tell me where the parchment is and Monsieur shall not be troubled again; but if he refuses, ah, let him remember his crime!"

In vain I insisted that I could not read the ciphers, and in vain I told him that I knew nothing of the mysterious parchment. Then I told him to take my life if he would; but that I could give him no information concerning the parchment. After more threats he left the room saying that he would keep the cipher and I should never have a day's peace till the parchment was found. His last words were, "Monsieur, remember your crime." I did not sleep any more that night. It seemed that in assuming the shoes of Geo. Burridge, Esq., London, I had assumed his crime also and forever locked a secret which I could not expound and which would haunt me forever.

In looking over a letter found in one of the pockets, I thought I had discovered a way of escape from this persecution; for I dare not mention any midnight visitor to the authorities for fear of detection, and my only escape seemed in flight. In one of the envelopes I had found a first cabin ticket for Paris, by a steamer which was to sail the next day, and I had secured a berth in her and placed my baggage on the steamer; and as I was anxiously awaiting the time for her departure, I read in an evening paper that John Waterman, who committed suicide some days since, had just fallen heir to a large fortune by the death of his uncle in the west. Then followed a column of moralizing on the fact that when we are just about to grasp our treasures our hands are nerveless, and when fortune comes to us she often finds us just gone. I thought of the few hundred pounds in my possession, I thought of the wealth that would have been mine; and then I wished, but not for the first time, that I were not "in his shoes." That night we sailed, and so far I had seen nothing of my persecutor.

Late in the evening I was standing by the side of the vessel, leaning over the rail and thinking over my ill-fortune, when a hand touched me on my shoulder, and I heard in a cool French accent the word "Monsieur." It was he, my midnight visitor whom I thought I had escaped. "Is Monsieur ready to read the cipher?" said he, producing the paper from his pocket. My first impulse was to hurl him over the vessel's side; but as he saw my motion towards him he placed his hand in his side pocke, and I heard the click of a revolver as he said, "Do not think to escape by destroying me. I am not the only one on board who is looking after Monsieur." "For heaven's sake," I cried, "what is all this parchment about? Tell me and I will do all in my power to find it. I am not Geo. Burridge at all; he fell dead at my door and I assumed his clothes, his name, and it seems his crime and penalty." "Monsieur has tried that little trick too many times already. That little game in London should have told you this. I will see Monsieur tomorrow night."

Fourteen nights were passed, and every one of them brought my tormentor to enquire if I was ready to read the cipher; and each time his parting words were, "Remember your crime." Then we landed at Havre and started for Paris by rail, but I could not escape the Frenchman. His form followed me like a shadow. The second night after my arrival in Paris I was wandering aimlessly along one of the walks of the Bois de Boulogne. It had grown quite dark, and I was making my way back to my hotel, when a handkerchief was suddenly thrown around my eyes and I was grasped by strong hands. I tried to give an alarm but was gagged, placed in a hack and rapidly driven over the pavements. Then my eyes were unbound and I found myself in company with the Frenchman, who always addressed me as "Monsieur," and a heavy built man, evidently an Italian. Soon the carriage came to a halt, I was handcuffed and taken out, and we proceeded along the narrow street. After walking some minutes we came to a grating in the pavement and here the Italian knocked with a heavy cane which he carried. The knock was answered from below and the grating was lifted. We descended and found ourselves in one of the great sewers of Paris. Vividly I can remember the damp smell that came from this subterranean canal, and the long line of dim light that stretched away in the distance and seemed to die out.

The man who had answered the knock at the gate hurried us into a boat, such as they use in inspecting the sewers, and we were silently rowed along the sluggish waters. It seemed as though hours were consumed in treading this underground labyrinth, when at last one of the men stood up in the boat and gave a shrill whistle. I heard the grating of iron above me and a ladder was let down into the boat. After ascending this I was again blindfolded and led along what seemed, by the echo of my feet, to be a narrow passage. Then I was shown into a room and the bandage removed from my eyes. I was in a narrow, high room, with walls and floor of stone. Upon a stand burned a small oil lamp, which emitted a sickly odor, and in one corner of the room was a low couch. "Monsieur will probably make up his mind to read the paper for me before long," said the Frenchman, and with these words I was left alone. I took the lamp and searched every corner of the room for some means of escape; but every stone was as immovable as the walls of the bastile. Then my lamp went out and I was left in the dark. How long I felt alone in the room I know not; but it at last, [illegible]. When I awoke it was with a feeling of intense hunger, for I had eaten nothing since I left my hotel. Could it be that I was left there to starve? No; for they might easily have taken my life before, and I had been told that my life was valuable, because I alone could tell where the parchment was concealed.

Finally, the door of my cell opened, and the stout looking Italian, who had assisted in bringing me here, entered and motioned for me to follow him. Through long, dark halls, through narrow passages, through high arched corridors we went, until we entered a gorgeously furnished drawing room. The heavy damask curtains gave a gloomy appearance to the room, near the centre of which sat the only occupant, excepting ourselves, an old man whose face, form and one leg bandaged and supported on a chair. "Ah, Monsieur," he said, in French, "you have come again, I see. This time you will not escape so easily. Will Monsieur eat?" This invitation was accompanied by a motion of his bloated head towards a table filled with choice viands. I hastily made assent and moved towards the table. "Stop a moment," said he, "tell me first where is the parchment." Again and again I protested that I knew nothing of the parchment; that I was not Geo. Burridge. Then I tried to tell him the story of my being known as Burridge, but he interrupted me, saying:—"I well know you are not Burridge, but do you think we have followed you all this time, from Paris to Rome, to London, to America, and yet do not know you as well as of old? Will Monsieur tell me where we can find the parchment before he eats?" I remembered the writing on the envelope of the murdered man, "Via Della Corso, 27," and as a last resort repeated the words, "Via Della Corso, No. 27." "Ah, Monsieur," said he, "the old story of the Corso will not do. Monsieur is not hungry, he may return to his cell." I was taken back through the long halls and narrow passages to my cell, where I found a small piece of bread and a bowl of water.

Day after day this interview was repeated and every time I was returned to my narrow cell to hungrily devour my small allowance of bread and water.

One night, as I sat thinking over my strange captivity, I heard a whisper at my grated door. I went to the door and heard the scratching of a match, and, as it burned up with a blue blaze, I saw the face of a pale woman—pale as death it seemed. Then she said hurriedly, "Be firm—never tell who has the parchment. Deliverance must come, but if not, God will reward you. Be firm." Then the match went out and the form vanished. What could this mean? What had she to do with the dreadful mystery of the parchment? Those large brown eyes! Where had I seen them? I remembered the miniature. Yes; I had seen the original.

One day, as I was summoned into the presence of the old man, I noticed that his head was bowed on his hands, and, as I approached him, he spoke in a cold tone, "Dead." The parchment can do no good now. Monsieur shall visit Rome again and there receive the penalty of his crime. Adieu Monsieur!"

I was led away to my cell; and that night was put in irons and taken away through the subterranean egress. I was taken by my Italian guard to Rome and brought before a tribunal. Questions were asked me in a language that I could not understand, and I incurred the wrath of the tribunal for refusing to answer. Finally a large paper was read to me, in Italian I should judge by the sound; I was clothed in a black robe and led to this prison tower, where I am now confined.

One day, as I was looking through the grated window over the squalid streets of this so-called Eternal City, I heard a knock at the door and a paper was passed through the bars which bore these words in French, "You have gained nothing by pretending not to understand the language of the tribunal. Your sentence might not have been so severe if you had acknowledged your identity. If you care, at this late hour, to leave your confession in writing, use the materials which you will find in the iron desk."

What my sentence may be, I know not; what the mystery of the parchment is, I know not; for what I am condemned I know not; of what I am accused I know not; and the only thing I do know is that I am "in his shoes."

This is my confession.

THE CHOICE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY H. B. H

I sat beside my blushing fair
And said, "Pr'ythee, what shall I compare
Thy blooming beauties, tender love!
To what below or what above!

"Would'st be like yonder queenly rose,
That in the garden buds and blows,
Decked in her robe of crimson dye,
Admired by every passing eye?"

"No, not the rose; beneath her vest
Too oft a thorn lies smartly pressed.
And he who would her favor gain
Must feel its point, endure its pain.

No, not the rose; alike on all,
Loved or unloved, her favors fall
O, no, the rose I would not be—
I'd bloom for thee—alone for thee."

"An angel, surely, thou should'st be
Shrobed in thine own purity;
With dazzling wings on high to soar,
Where earthly stains should taint no more."

"No, not an angel; they may shine
Dazzling and pure, but love's like mine
They know not, and I'd rather be
Tender and true, and cling to thee.

"Like flower below, nor form above,
Would I be likened in my love;
But faithful, earnest, fond, I'd be
The woman formed to love but thee."

"BILL OF THE PLAY,"

HASHED UP AS A SIDE DISH,

FOR THE SPICURES OF THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY HARRY R. SALLADA.

The following compilation is that of titles of plays, all of which I have recalled from memory, and have made use of no play that I have not seen.

In a recent "Midsummer Nights Dream," I thought that "King Lear" invited his friend "Richard III" to his marriage with the "Maid Oneonta." The proceeding aroused the jealousy of "Boyick," who obtained the assistance of "Metamora" and his "Bandits" to murder the king's son, "Daniel," "After Dark," in the "Willow Copse," then to seize the queen, and carry her away on the brig "Flying Scud;" but the king's prime minister, "Sir Giles Overreach," standing "Under the Gaslight," in the hall of the "Palace of Truth," overheard this proposed "Foul Play," and, to frustrate their designs, he gave the "Duke's Motto" to the "Three Guardsmen," with orders to proceed to "London" and arrest "St. Marc," whose residence was at "East Lynne," immediately warned of the danger to the king's family. While this plot was going on, "Damon and Pythias" were making love to the queen's maids of honor, "Lady Audley" and her "American Cousin," but as "Oliver Twist" and "John Garth" already had the inside track, the ladies informed Messrs. D. and P. that "One Wife" was enough for them, and rumor said they were secretly married to "Ellie," the barmaid at the "Cherry Tree Inn," and the "Orange Girl," at least they lived together as "Man and Wife," and to marry any one else they must obtain a "Divorce," which could be easily done if they knew any one "On the Jury," or obtained the services of some cheap lawyer among which class there were plenty of "Black Sheep." NOTICE.

☞ CORRESPONDENTS, advertisers, and all others writing in relation to matters connected with this or any other department of the CLIPPER, are respectfully requested to address their favors to the editor and proprietor, and thereby avoid omissions, mistakes and confusion, which are likely to occur when such communications are addressed to our assistants.

NOTICE.

ADVERTISERS must hand in their favors before 6 o'clock on Monday evening, in order to have them appear in that week's issue.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ We never answer questions by mail. All addressed to us seeking information will be answered through this column only.

J. B. G., Ottawa.—Our view of the matter is based on this point, viz:—That each player, in turn, has the privilege of accepting or rejecting the card turned up as trump, until the question is decided. A deals and turns up card for trump; B, on his left, is entitled to first ask the pone's (C) opinion in order. If C says he does not order it up, A, the dealer, on the offer of assistance by his partner, takes it up, and declares to go alone; thus depriving D, in his turn, of his right to pass upon the trump, for the dealer, not C, assumes responsibility of the trump before his partner can pass upon it; and here, in our opinion, is where the wrong lies, in preventing D from assuming his right to pass or order up the trump, in his regular turn; in privilege also a member of the trump to avoid the mischief likely to be entirely ignored through collusion between second and fourth hands.

☞ The award of the Emperor William of Germany in decision of the San Juan boundary arbitration was rendered in favor of the United States on Oct. 20th, being confirmed and signed by the ministerial representatives of this country and England just before midnight. The reports of the German sovereign's advisers charge England with vagueness in the wording of the treaty of 1846, and state that the word "southerly," used in the instrument means the shortest channel to the Strait of Juan de Fuca. A special messenger left Berlin en route to Washington, D. C., on Oct. 26th. The press of London, Eng., comment severely upon the award.

RED DICK AND OTHERS.—1. By the act of the last legislature, pools are prohibited being carried on the person. 2. A lead 50 yards is sufficient to cross a man on a straight ticket. It is not possible for a minority vote in the Electoral College to elect a president of the United States, although a person may be elected president who has a majority vote. The party betting that a minority can elect a president loses, for such election rests with the Electoral College, where a majority is requisite.

J. G. H., Cincinnati, O.—1. In order to copyrights a play, have the title page carefully put forward it with $1 to the Librarian of Congress, Washington, D. C., which will no free of postage if you mark the words "Copyright matter" on the envelope. A certificate of copyright will be returned to you. 2. No. 3. We know nothing of him beyond the fact that he once was our correspondent.

C. E. L., Harlem.—The fastest time on record by a steamboat from New York to Albany, N. Y., is 4 hours and 11 minutes, made by the Alida. The Mary Powell ran from Poughkeepsie to New York city, making six landings, in 3 hours and 45 minutes. The trip from New York to Newburgh, with three landings, was made in 2 hours and 40 minutes, May 27th, 1871.

COLLEGE.—"A goes to the bat first. At the end of the seventh innings the score stands A, 8; B, 6. In the eighth innings A is thanked, and B makes four runs, with only two men out. Darkness coming on, the umpire calls game and gives it to A, on a 9 score—A, 8; B, 10; although the innings was not completed. Was his decision correct?".....Yes.

C. H.—We have the case so far into the matter as it is advisable to go at present; the publication of your lengthy letter would only induce counter statements; and thus what is intended to help the man on your part might be the indirect means of injuring him. Whatever is done should be done quietly, in a legal manner.

W. H. L., Manitowoc.—1. Tom Sayers and Jim Mace were never matched, though a forfeit was twice put up for a match, Jim allowing Tom to draw or concede, in the event of a draw, the battle and time. 2. Mace did whip every man with whom he fought, save Joe Coburn, though he was beaten by Brettle and King.

J. F. HYATSVILLE, Del.—The umpire calls game and gives to the "minority;" also "parts;" consequently, if a man is the only candidate for office and gets all the votes, he does not, in the strictly correct sense of the term, get a majority—he gets an entirety.

G. S., Chicago.—1. The dealer is obliged to tell how many cards he took himself, but not how many he gave to the other players or any of them. 2. The Stockings won every game they played in 1869. 3. Ethan Allen's best time is 2:25.

CONSTANT READER, Lee, Mass.—The amount of money to be paid for a candy or concert privilege or all privileges in a circus is always the subject of a private bargain between manager and purchaser. Your other questions relate to private matters, and such we never answer.

B., Brooklyn, L. I.—A play can be dramatized from a story that is copyrighted, provided that in addition to the certificate of copyright it does not contain the words "all rights secured," and the play can be copyrighted.

T. F. KNICKERBOCKER.—1. In a running race, the first, second and third in the money. 2. Weight weights, in racing, mean 28 lbs. over the regular weights for age.

A. B. C., Chicago, Ill.—The party having but two points to go, and making both, won the game, as nine points for Jack would not be taken out of the order of high, low, Jack, game, except when turned up by the dealer, when it could be scored at once.

DAVE.—Although W. Horace Lingard managed the Theatre Comique, and from that fact some persons may have thought it Lingard's Theatre, still the Theatre Comique was its only proper title; therefore you lose your bet.

D. S., Baltimore.—Mace and O'Baldwin were matched in England, but it ended in a draw, Mace having been arrested the night previous to the day fixed for the fight and placed under bonds to keep the peace.

SAM B. H., South Bend, Ind.—The question depen's on how the state goes for the highest officer voted for; consequently, as the democratic candidate for governor in Indiana was elected, the state is considered as having gone dem cra ic.

CONSTANT READER, Springfield, Mass.—1. We have no record of time for the distance you mention. 2. The Liberty Hose of Keokuk, Iowa, is said to have run 500 yards, unreeling 300 feet of hose, in 1.05.

JOHN N. L., Oxford, Miss.—Four trays and a nine count twenty-four at cribbage, six, twelve for fifteens, and twelve for double pair royal. We don't answer by mail.

THOS. FITZ.—President Hoffman, after issuing his proclamation last year, recommended that Thanksgiving Day be held on Nov. 30th, the day appointed by the president.

CONSTANT READER, Horseheads, N. Y.—We do not know the origin of the cant terms "Bulls" and "Bears," applied to buyers and sellers of stock on speculation.

CHARLES D. E. Olive Girardeau, Mo.—The gent'eman is out of business, so it's no use to send to him; neither do we know any one else.

J. E. AND J. S., Wayne, Mich.—We have not an accurate record of the seating capacity of the late Crosby Opera House at Chicago, but, one of the Lyceum, Chicago, is said to seat 2,000.

C. L., Buffalo, N. Y.—Prize agents for circuses receive, in addition to their salaries, amounts from $25 to $75 per week, according to their reputation, experience and ability.

JIM, Columbia, Pa.—"Rosa" is copyrighted and is the private property of Mr. Leslie Wallace, the author, without whose consent it cannot legally be performed.

B. K.—O, having but one point to go, and making the two points he gave with his high, game was not set back, and, consequently, went out first with his point for high.

O'CONNOR.—It was an evasive bet, because A had no money in bank to back his $150 check; in fact, it was a fraud, and there is no alternative but to consider the bet drawn.

SAM LEARDS, Albany, N. Y.—B is not entitled to another card after having once discarded and been helped.

A. A., 181.—A is investing $210 to $60, and not $210 to $100. If he wins the bet, he only realizes $40.

H. W. B., Pittsburgh.—The election for president of the United States is held on the same day throughout the country.

CLIPPER HOUSE, Cleveland, O.—We consider whist the most scientific game of cards.

D. D. EMERY, Chicago.—We have it, and will endeavor to make room for it soon.

D. G. W., Pentwater.—Your figures are a little too high, and you lose your bet.

MEMORY.—Longfellow was beaten by Helmbold in the Saratoga Cup, at the August meeting in 1871.

JOHN H., Phila.—The best recorded time for 100 yards is 9¼ seconds, by Geo. Seward.

A CONSTANT READER.—See the base ball department of our past issue.

W. H., Guelph, Ont.—The fastest time by a pedestrian, one mile, level, is 4:17¼; down hill, 4:02.

RED HOT.—One with the Atlantics and two each with the other clubs.

THREE READERS.—All bets are off as regards the first prize, as the receipts were divided by the two leading clubs.

JAS. J. CLINTON.—No official engagements have been made public.

H. R. B., Philadelphia.—Thank you; will give it early attention.

J. W. G., Iowa City.—It is nice but naughty, and we must decline it.

THOMSON.—The distance from New York to Liverpool is 3,084 miles.

J. F. B., Cumberland, Md.—Send to Ed. James, 88 and 90 Centre street, as per his advertisement.

J. L., Leavenworth, Kansas.—Include them in the following week's report, if they are fresh appearances.

BEVERAL MEMBERS OF A CLUB, Cincinnati, O.—John Wilkes Booth, at the time of his death, was 27 years of age.

SPORTING FAIRE.—All your questions refer to the private affairs of professional people, and such we never answer.

W. E., Central Falls, R. I.—Barry Sullivan has acted in all the principal cities of this country.

F. W. K., Newark, N. J.—President Grant's electoral vote in 1868 was 214; and his popular majority 305,456.

W. H. F.—No. 444 Broadway, used as a variety theatre, was destroyed by fire on Feb. 22d, 1865.

W. H., Guelph, Ont.—The fastest mile running time on record is this country is 1:43¾, made by Alarm, at Saratoga, Aug. 9th, 1872.

HENRY, Cincinnati.—You win. Your bet that you can show $20 when you stake $5 with the stakeholder and cover out $30 more.

TIME, Albany.—We believe that of Cincinnati to be the better.

SPRING GARDEN.—Fister is 5 ft. 9 in. and Leonard is 5 ft. 7 in.

J. B. J., Jackson, Mich.—We never answer such questions.

CLIPPER SUBSCRIBER.—Opened any for a month or two yet.

PHENIX, Maine.—Get De Witt's Base Ball Guide for 1873.

O. P., Buffalo.—Vide record of championship games.

H. F. S.—See musical summary of present issue.

J. B. C., Baltimore.—See answer to "Pitcher."

RANDOM.—There is a penitentiary at Alton, Ill.

F. C. A.—Hicks Hayhurst, Philadelphia.

B. B. CLIPPER.—It has several superiors.

BALL TOSSER.—The Eckford did in 1868.

A. W. F.—Accepted for next week.

G. W. E., Phila.—No, we do not.

JOSEPH.—See answer to Sam A.

C. H. R., Corry.—All right.

GEO. MACK.—Bets drawn.

J. C., Paterson.—Yes.

SAM A.—Bets are off.

OPERA ON THE HALF SHELL.—It has just been discovered by some of our contemporaries that Maretzek's new opera speculation is a failure, a fact which the CLIPPER promulgated in the early stages of the speculation. In truth, the troupe which Maretzek has presented to the notice of the people of New York is an insult to their musical taste; and the only wonder is that they permitted such an odd mixture of bad singers to continue their performances. Another outrage committed by the managers is the extortionate charge of four dollars for a decent seat at the opera, where these inferior vocalists and evidently poorly trained orchestra and chorus appear. Isn't it about time that our empresari were taught that Americans can tell the mock turtle from the real, and that while willing to pay well for a fine article they will no longer suffer themselves to be swindled by pinchbeck speculators?

THREE-CORNERED SET-TO.—We are promised a lively contest in this city on the 5th inst., on the Mayoralty question, there being three candidates fairly and squarely before the people for that office. If aught is said against "Jimmy O'Brien," "Apollo strikes the liar." If belligerents dispute the claims of Havemeyer, the gentlemen "who fit mit Sigel" will have 'em higher than ever Haman hung. And should either of the opposing factions seek to buck against Lawrence, Tammany's injuns will scalp 'em on the spot—"So much for buckin' 'em." So it will be seen that each candidate has his supporters and defenders—gentlemen of the "rich Irish brogue" swearing by O'Brien; those addicted to the "sweet German accent" keeping "watch on the Rhine" wine for Havemeyer; while, "lo! the poor Injun" "don't give up the ship"—on behalf of Lawrence.

NEVER BEFORE, in the history of the American metropolis, have the horse-pitals been so full of patients as at the present time. To the fact that, by their "good offices," these institutions are exerting an influensal benefit no one can say neigh. The hack-ing cough you hear on all sides as you enter one of these places reminds you quite forcibly of the cough-y grounds of an immense restaurant. "The epizootic" is catching.

AN EVER-LAST-ING TOOL.—It is stated on unquestionable authority that in one of the shoe shops of Lynn, Mass., is a lapstone which has been in use in the same shop for 127 years. This is probably one of the "lap (stones) of ages" we hear so much about, on which many a devoted cordwainer has beaten time to his soles' delight. As the poet says—Awl's well that wax ends well.

GREETING.—The cheerful news comes to us from West Virginia that a Mrs. Stanley, of that place, is now the happy progenitor of 14 children, 30 grand children, and 223 great and great-great-grand children. From all of which it is quite evident that this Stanley is getting "on"; remarkably well.

THE HORSE RACE is likely to die out this fall. At least several on the lists last week were "postponed on account of the weather," and the injunction will, no doubt, be made perpetual by reason of the distemper. But is it proper to call a race horse the horse race?

NOT SO.—Lotta is quietly resting from her labors on the continent of Europe, yet the daily papers are constantly mis-stating facts by proclaiming:—"Lotta busties" in the "Streets of New York."

WE HAVE JUST added to our cabinet of curiosities a bottle of the "first water" from which all the diamonds are taken, and a small piece of the "bitter end" novelists and politicians so delight in.

ONE OF THE INDICTED DISCIPLES of the "Ring" having gone to Havana "for the benefit of his health," or something, the authorities have ceased to "look for greener fields" in this vicinity.

BEFORE PASSING upon the innocence or guilt of Mayor Hall, now on trial, would it not be well for the jury to wait and see what the London Times has to say about it?

"OUR JIM" believes that if the epizootic continues much longer, New York city will drop down to the level of other "one-horse towns."

THE LITTLE "BLACK YER BOOTS" boys in the vicinity of the City Hall are on a par with that other little Sun, since they shine for all.

NEWS OF THE WEEK BOILED DOWN.

G. W. F., Ilion, N. Y.—1. Your friend is wrong, for a horse distanced in a race after winning a heat is a worse horse than that one that has held second or third place throughout the race. The latter can win second or third money, but a distanced horse cannot possibly win anything. 2. A horse winning a heat in a race is better than a horse that maintained second position, even if the former was the last horse on every other heat except the one he won.

☞. The trial of Chief of Police McWilliams and Detective Doyle is now in progress at Jersey City, N. J. Very damaging testimony has been obtained against them from Frank Dennis and Chas. J. Proctor, the former stating that McWilliams had suggested the robbery to him, and the latter that he (the chief) had given $60 towards purchasing tools.

☞. Paris papers are discussing the probable adoption at the coming session of the French National Assembly of constitutional amendments which shall make M. Thiers president for life, create an upper chamber and vice-president, partially to model the Assembly, and provide restriction upon universal suffrage.

☞. Great damage has been occasioned throughout the plains of Lombardy and Piedmont by the overflow of the river Po and its affluents. Whole districts have been inundated, and thousands of their inhabitants compelled to flee to the highlands for safety.

☞. Advices from Belize, Honduras, via Havana, state that the British troops have pursued the rebellious Indians who recently raided upon the white settlements, and killed forty of them in an encounter.

☞. A despatch from Kingston, Jamaica, states that the coolies at Demerara rose against the planters recently and a serious riot occurred. Two coolies were murdered, and fifteen coolies were killed before peace was restored.

☞. If is reported that a conspiracy in the Caucasus to throw off the dominion of Russia in that province has been discovered. A general rising of the tribes was intended, but the leaders have been arrested and imprisoned.

PEDESTRIANISM.

CHAMPIONSHIP FOOT RACE.

Fully three thousand persons congregated at the Gate-head Borough grounds, Newcastle, Eng., on Sept. 30th, to witness the competition for Tom Smith's silver challenge cup and $30 in money, for a mile championship race. There were fourteen entries, viz:—Ridley, of Gateshead; Hindle, of Bolton; Hall, of Gateshead, the mile champion; J. M'Leavy, the four mile champion; R. Hindle, of Paisley; W. Smith, of Paisley; J. Talbot, of Newcastle, and J. Davidson, of Jarrow. The only condition attached to the competition for the cup was that it be held for twelve months against all challengers before becoming the absolute property of any one, and the prizes were divided as follows—First man, cup and $20; second, $7; third, $3, and fourth, $2. As to the condition of the men, the three strangers were in grand trim, but the local men only made a poor show. Talbot and Davidson being as big as bullocks, while Reilly looked and really was much too fat. Wilson was referee, and Smith starter. The track is 660 yards round, and the competitors had, therefore, to cover three laps less 40 yards, the start being a distance along the top flat, and the finish opposite the stand. The men, who had drawn for their stations, were placed in a line as follows:—No. 1 counting from the side next the pavilion—Hindle, 2; Talbot, 3; Davidson, 4; Ridley, 5; M'Leavy, 6, and Smith, 7. All being now in readiness, an excellent start was made, and for the first 30 yards they continued level, but Smith then threw out, and with a couple of yards the start Ridley took the lead at a moderate pace, Hindle going on third, M'Leavy fourth, Davidson fifth, and Talbot last. These positions were maintained for the last lap, when Smith, dropped back, and then running was then taken up by Hindle, who shot past Ridley at the last top turn. Hindle improved the rate of progression considerably down the back stretch, half way along which Ridley challenged, and momentarily showed in front, but Hindle headed him again. Twice in the next 100 yards the Gateshead man closed with the leader, and on the last occasion he was fairly level with him half way up the straight, when cutting it fine on the inside, he got amongst some broken ground, stumbled and fell heavily. This extinguished whatever chance the Gateshead representative had, and Hindle went on with the lead again, being now attended by M'Leavy, second, three yards in front of Smith, third, the interval of a similar distance separating the latter from Talbot, fourth, Davidson whipping in. After passing the Stand the Jarrow man had had enough of it, and retired, and excepting that the three strangers gradually left Talbot in the rear, the order remained unchanged to the finish until after entering the straight for the last time, M'Leavy then made an effort to overhaul Hindle, but the latter, full of running, drew away from him cleverly by six yards, in 4m. 31½s. Ward, the city, was second a dozen yards in front of Smith, the third, and Talbot walked in a bad fourth. There was not much wind stirring, but the ground was very heavy going, and taking this circumstance into account, the time of the winner was not bad.

The same night, at T. Winship's, the Old Duke of Cumberland Inn, Hinde street, Newcastle, articles of agreement were drawn up and signed for a quarter mile race, at those grounds, between Talbot and Davidson, on Saturday, Nov. 23d, for £100 a side. The last match which the men ran over the same distance, in June, was a very severe one, Talbot just landing a winner by half a yard.

DEATH OF WM. ROBINSON, PEDESTRIAN.—We have just received a notice informing us of the death of W. Robinson, which occurred at East New York, Sept. 14, from a thma. Mr. Robinson had been in this country for a number of years, during which time he commanded in several walking matches, at points he was very fond of. He was, however, better known in England than in this country and saw his best days there. Mr. Robinson was a great friend of Harry Woodstock, for many years the run and pedestrian reporter for the New York Clipper, and with Mr. Woodstock and partner, John Sheffield. He was a lithographer by trade and executed some very fine portraits of sporting celebrities on stone. His remains rest in Evergreen Cemetery.

THOMAS BUCHAN, alias "Scotch Tommy," offers to concede a start of one yard in 100 yards to Jim Rowe, if the latter will make the match for $100 or $150 a side, and will run in from two days to two months, at the option of Rowe. Tommy will be at the Bob Roy House, Portland street, Boston, from 7 to 9 o'clock P. M., on Nov. 2d, prepared to sign articles and stake.

A FOOT RACE, one hundred yards, came off at Lemont, Ill., on Oct. 20th, between Prof. F. Chapman and Nick Pauls, best two in three. Pauls took the first heat in 11 seconds, Chapman the next in 11¼ secs., and Pauls the third and the race in 11¼ secs.

CHARLEY NOURSE AND JOHNNY SCHOLES are to run one mile, for $250 a side, on the cricket ground at Toronto, C. W., sometime during the present month.

W. H. ARSMITH AND WM. COREER have been matched to run 130 yards, at Waterbury, Conn., on Nov. 16th.

CRICKET.

CARLESS vs. DUTTON.

A match at cricket—the third of a series—between the "merry men" of Paterson and Newark, N. J., captained, respectively, by Joe Carless and Joe Dutton, was played at Newark on Tuesday, Oct. 29th. There was quite a large attendance of the friends of the players, and the game was very interesting. As instanced by the scores, the playing of Carless' eleven (of excellent fun of the opposite team, Charley Halliday particularly distinguishing himself, both in batting and bowling. After the game was ended, visitors, players and their friends, partook of an excellent repast, enjoyed themselves in a sociable fashion for a couple of hours. The Patersonians won by one hundred and seven runs, this triumph giving them the victory in the series of three games. The score follows:

THE ENGLISH AMATEUR CRICKETERS AT HOME.—The team of amateur cricketers, who recently paid a visit to this country, arrived at Derry on October 7th, and Bell's Life, of the 12th, contains the following communication from the secretary of the Marylebone Club, who accompanied them:—

DEAR SIR.—We have arrived in England after a capital passage in the Allan steamship Prussian. Our tour throughout the dominion has been one continual ovation. our reception at New York, Philadelphia and Boston, was simply cordial. One common feeling animated our American and Canadian hosts. In the States, as in Canada, we were welcomed as friends. We are anxious to testify, not only to the same hospitality, but to the same courtesy which characterized the cricket arrangements. In every place the game was played in the genuine spirit of cricket, and it is most gratifying to record that throughout the tour not one single incident arose between us and our antagonists to disturb the harmony that should always pervade manly cricketers. I herewith forward a few remarks, with scores at full length, and I should feel obliged for the assistance of your valuable columns to convey the sincere record of our sentiments and the expression of our gratitude to all lovers of cricket wherever the game is played.

Yours, &c., H. A. FITZGERALD, Secretary M. C. C.

FOREIGN SHOW NEWS.

Dramatic.

CONCERNING AMUSEMENTS in foreign lands, our advices are up to Oct. 12th. On another page may be found an account of the new pieces produced at the London, Eng., theatres, since our last review. At most of the theatres in that city the active business has been carried on. Only four theatres remain unopened and at three of these—the St. James' Theatre Comique and Charing Cross—the season will be speedily commenced. At the Princess', Messrs. Phelps and Creswick, acting on alternate nights in the legitimate drama, have attracted good sized audiences. On Oct. 19th they were to have acted together in "Macbeth"—Phelps, Macbeth; Creswick, Macduff. Miss Glyn is for shortly appearing.....At the Strand, "The Lady of the Lane," a "skittish" drama, was in active preparation.....At the Gaiety, Mr. Chas. Matthews re-appeared, after a long absence, on Oct. 7th, before "one of the largest and most fashionable audiences that have ever crowded within it. So soon as the well known comedian appeared a burst of applause, such as seldom tries the walls of a theatre, burst forth, again, and again it rang. The actor making futile attempts to go on with the piece, while the audience were determined to take first their full of cheering.".....At the Royalty the Misses Maggie Brennan and Nelly Bromley had been added to the company. "Kind to a Fault" was to have given place to "Old Heads and Young Hearts," on Oct. 18th.....At the Pavilion a new drama by E. Towers, entitled "Angling; or, Fishing in Troubled Waters," was to have been produced on Oct. 14th.....At the East London, an adaptation of one of Harrison Ainsworth's novels, by Frederick Marchant, entitled "Under the Shadow of Old St. Paul's," was to have been produced on Oct. 14th.....The Royal Pavilion Theatre was announced to open for the season on Oct. 19th, with a new domestic comedy, entitled "A Cabinet Secret," "Geneviève de Brabant," and a grand ballet.....At the other theatres no changes had occurred.

M. Victor Hugo's "Cromwell," which has never been presented on the French stage, is about to be adapted for the English stage by two friends of the poet, as an answer to Mr. Wills's dramatization of the Protector's life recent drama, "Charles I."

MR. GEORGE L. PENDAR, the well-known theatrical and equestrian manager, sailed on Oct. 12th, for America. Mr. Pendar is deputated to engage artists for the London theatre, also for starring engagements for some of our principal actors and actresses. On his return he will assume the management of a theatre which will be placed under his entire control.

THE CARLTON CASINO, of Cuba, on Oct. 11th, issued a decree in relation to an increase of taxation in that island to go into effect on Jan. 1st, 1873, from which we excerpt the following:—"Theatres and public performances shall pay the gross amount of one night's receipts, with deduction for expenses, and without regard to duration of season or number of performances."

THE EMPEROR FRANCIS JOSEPH has pardoned his cousin, the Archduke Rainer, who, several years ago, married a Vienna actress. He has also restored to him all the military dignities and charges of which he had deprived him.

Musical.

PRESENTATION TO MLLE TITIENS.—At the conclusion of the performance of an oratorio in the Roman Catholic Cathedral, Marlborough street, Dublin, Ireland, on Oct. 6th, the priests of that church presented an address to Mlle Titiens, in recognition of her many kindnesses during a series of years. The address is written on seven pages of vellum, and is illuminated in the highest style of art. The first page contains the formal record of the presentation, and the particular occasion that suggested it. At the foot of the page is an exquisite miniature illumination of the little village of Iechl, the birthplace of the highly-gifted and amiable songstress. Beneath the picture is written the words "Der Kreuzstein Iechl." At the foot of the second page is a charming little picture of Glendalough, with a round tower, an Irish wolf-dog, and a harp, beautifully grouped on its "sloping shore." The following page is rich with rose-colored illumination, interspersed with representations of musical instruments. In the seventh page the address is brought to a conclusion within a charming surrounding of arabesque. This page is surmounted by a beautifully painted harp, and is illustrated on the picture by wreaths of choicely grouped flowers. The cover is of morocco of various colors in the centre of the front cover is a raised monogram, containing the initials ("T. T.") of the Titiens, interlaced with a lyre, both wrought in raised gilt brass. A case of morocco is added to contain the exquisite work of art, and bears on its exterior the inscription "Address to Mlle Titiens." The penmanship and the illumination are the work of the pupils of the schools of the Sisters of Charity.

A DUEL BETWEEN TWO BARITONES.—Mr. Santley and Sher. Campbell met in London, Eng., some few days after the latter's arrival there, and during a conversation Mr. Santley began to abuse America and Americans, when Campbell declared that he would not hear his country abused, and the conversation waxing warm, blows were exchanged. Who came out best our informant saith not. It was certainly in bad taste for Mr. Santley to speak disparagingly of those who had treated him so kindly in New York.

THE ALLEGHANIAN VOCALISTS and Swiss bell players appeared at the noonday popular concerts at Liverpool, Eng., on Oct. 13th.

Variety Halls.

WE HAVE BUT LITTLE NOVELTY to report at the London, Eng., music halls. At the Pavilion, J. G. Forde, patter vocalist; Fred. Foster, comique; Jolly Nash, comique; Miss Harrington and Mlle. Delgrange, vocalists, were the chief attractions.....J. B. Johnson, "the hero of London Bridge," the King comic ballet troupe and the Siamese troupe of gymnasts were the chief attractions at the South London Palace.....At the Metropolitan, Herrmann, the magician, was performing two illusions—"The Invisible Flying Child" and "The Aerial Suspension".....At the Royal Cambridge "The Fakir of Oulon" was the chief feature.....At the Royal Forester, Herrmann had made his first appearance on the east side of the town. The other features were Fred. Foster, Polly Ashcroft, American performer; Louie Sherrington, Walter Lorraine, Nellie Moore, Leonora Gray, Mme. Tonnelier, and Fothergill and Summerson, duetists.

Negro Minstrelsy.

M. B. LEAVITT was to have made his first appearance in England at Liverpool, with Sam Hague's Minstrels, on Oct. 14th, appearing on the bone end.

Circuses.

FALL OF A CIRCUS GALLERY IN SHEFFIELD, ENG.—A cable telegram informs us that the gallery which was filled with spectators fell on the evening of Oct. 21st, upon the heads of those below. By the accident and the panic which ensued, some thirty persons were severely injured.

F. NEWSOM'S CIRCUS was to have commenced a season at Liverpool, Eng., on Oct. 14th.

CUPID'S FOIBLES, FOLLIES AND FANCIES.

TO "SOPHETNA."

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

Dear, gentle heart, I scarce know how
To make this whimsical request;
That not I doubt thy love, (I now
I know not why,) am so blest—
I ask not, since I am thy choice;
And, long a part from to her near,
To hear (unless the tempest's voice,
I fly to thee. If in thy breast
The fire of love should ere burn low,
Or, spare the heart that loves thee best—
Let me not know it leaning slow.
And, as the unconscious daisies 'bide
Securely warm 'neath winter's snow,
Secure my happy hours will glide—
Oh, sweetheart! never let me know.

Chicago, Ill., Oct. 14th, 1872. "BEDOUIN MAID."

A POLISH LADY KNOUTED.

The Official Whipping in Public of Alexandrina Kossowitz—The Penalty of Sympathy with Rebels.

At a gathering of Poles in the little village of Kernat, on the Southern Siemen, on the 29th of July last, when all thought themselves secure from the intrusion of any of the numerous spies who keep the Russian officials informed of the malcontents among them, Alexandrina Kossowitz, a young lady whose father, the younger son of a formerly noble Polish family, was killed in the recent troubles in Warsaw, expressed her sympathy with the unfortunate whom Russian severity had murdered or sent into exile. The meeting was a purely social one, and none dreamed that anything said there would reach the ears of spies, for all present were known to be Poles, and firm haters of the harsh rule under which they then lived. Still, as the young girl, in her passionate remembrance of a father's love, deplored his death, expressed her sympathy with rebellion and her detestation of her oppressors, she was cautioned lest her loud tone should enable people at the window to hear her. With a hasty glance, as though to read in the faces of those about her who should betray her, the young lady ceased her execrations and relapsed into silence. When ten o'clock arrived, the latest hour of Polish gatherings, the company separated, and Alexandrina Kossowitz, accompanied by her affianced, Julian Temensky, went to her home.

If, in passing from the house of the gathering, she had been a mere observant, Alexandrina would have seen the maliciously triumphant glances cast after her by Catherine Merdoff, a woman about thirty-five years, a Pole by birth, and a sympathiser with her own unhappy countrywomen whenever her own passion was not concerned, and, from subsequent proceedings, it seems that in this case she had been superseded in the affections of the young Doctor Temensky by the more beautiful and younger Alexandrina Kossowitz.

On the following day, shortly after rising, Alexandrina was seized in her own home, a short distance from Kernat, by two Cossacks of the guard at the garrison, and taken before the petty judge.

The young lady of nineteen, handsome and trembling, produced no feeling of pity. Having at first denied the accusation, she was confronted with Catherine Merdoff, and then acknowledged her offence. In passing sentence the petty judge said her seditious utterances might have warranted him in sending her before a higher tribunal, where the penalty would be death; but in view of her youth and contrition, he would merely order her to receive thirty-five lashes of the knout. Almost benumbed with shame and terror, the girl was led away to be prepared for punishment, for in Russia all sentences, save that of death, are carried out immediately after they have been pronounced.

A word having been sent to the officer commanding the troops, a guard of two hundred men were ordered into the garrison square, and the executioner of the troop was called upon to be ready to carry out the duties of his office. In half an hour after the sentence had been given the troops had been formed in a hollow square, in the centre of which had been placed a scaffold, standing on four legs, the top of which was about the height of a man. On this stood the executioner, having in his muscular hand the knout. This weapon consists of a stick or handle two feet long, with a lash four feet long of sole leather, to the end of which is attached by a loop a piece of flat raw hide two inches wide and two feet long. In the hands of an experienced man, the piece of raw hide can be made to cut like a knife.

As the executioner stood facing the scaffold, Alexandrina Kossowitz was brought to him by her guard, and in a few moments her clothing was removed to her waist, despite her almost mute appeals to be spared the shame. As she pleaded she was bent on the plane, her hands strapped to the two upper corners, and her ankles secured at the foot of the structure. One of the executioners' assistants held her head, and the petty judge gave the order for whipping to commence. Whirling the long lash in the air, the executioner stepped suddenly backward, and with a sharp crack, the thong fell on the back of the sobbing girl, cutting a livid streak from her right shoulder to her waist, a terrible tremor passed over her, and a quick, low cry, escaped her lips, but it was the only sound she uttered, and were it not for the blood which soon commenced to flow, it might have seemed that the whipping was being given to the naked body of a corpse. When the last lash had been given the young lady was unfastened, and with her clothing rudely thrown over her, she was taken to prison. After thanking the judge for his mercy, according to the necessary formula, she was delivered over to her friends.

Five days afterward the Gazette of Wilna contained this announcement:—"The Polish criminal, Alexandrina Kossowitz, daughter of the rebel, Peter Kossowitz, who was knouted for seditious utterances on the 24th of July, at Kernat, while submitting her lacerations to medical treatment, in the house of the physician Temensky, stole a vial of prussic acid, with which she ended her days.

A SOCIAL ROMANCE.

A Conchman Secretly Weds His Employer's Daughter.

A case that somewhat assimilates to the Dean-Boker wedding, that happened in this city a few years since, has recently occurred in Chicago, the particulars of which we clip from the Post, as follows:—The social romance of the marriage of Miss Ella Hancock, daughter of John L. Hancock, the well known packer, to her father's coachman, Thomas Lynden, a native of England, has assumed a shape before Judge Gary, in the Supreme Court, in the form of a report from the master, H. B. Magruder. The case is one of the most singular on record. The girl is, at the present time, not more than fifteen years old, and is quite a child in appearance and manner. Lynden is about thirty-five years of age, quite bald, with no particular prepossession of aspect or manner to render him dangerous as a Lothario. He hired as a coachman to Mr. Hancock last May, and drove out Miss Ella, in common with numerous members of the family, on several occasions. Sometimes he drove her out alone, and, during these lonely drives, the bald-headed Saxon contrived to win the confidence of the unsuspecting child. He led her, it is alleged, to believe that he was a person of consequence—a prince in disguise, or something that way—and, on one occasion, when driving along Wabash avenue, Miss Ella saw a beautiful house, and, according to her statement, exclaimed, "Oh, how I'd like to live in a house like that!" The obliging Thomas said, "you shall, right, you shall have that house as soon as we are married." And so, according to the allegation, Ella was captured by the promise of a big house on the avenue, and consented to become Mrs. Thomas Lynden, after the fashion prescribed in certain old country ballads, when maidens fair and young bestowed themselves, for love and nonsense, on their father's serving men, who, however were always fellows of wondrous fine physique, and furnished with ambrosial curls. So the gentle and bald-headed Thomas proposed to get a license from the county clerk, and in order to have no difficulty in the matter, swore, as is alleged by Ella Hancock, that the girl was over eighteen years of age. The license was procured and the parties were duly married by Rev. C. H. Fowler, a Methodist minister of this city. After the ceremony, as further alleged, Ella returned to the bosom of her family, and never cohabited with or acknowledged the enterprising Lynden as her husband. The girl further avers that she was unaware that the matrimonial ceremony placed her, in any way, under the control of Lynden, but about eight days after the event, feeling alarmed, told her sister, Mrs. Skinner, about the matter. Mrs. Skinner told Mr. Skinner, and the latter told Mr. Hancock, who had an animated interview with Thomas, and gave him a piece of his mind, at the same time discharging him from the service. The girl, according to her own affidavit and those of her father, sister, man-servants, and maid-servants, was never influenced to demand an annulment of the marriage, but was induced by a perfect indifference to the smooth-pated person who, in so strange a way, and with the promise of a pretty house, induced her to change her name. All her friends were greatly shocked, but as they aver, they did not influence the girl to seek an annulment of the marriage, as being illegal on the ground of a false affidavit for the procuration of a license. However that may be, the girl utterly refused to live with Lynden, and, as she swears, voluntarily entered into legal proceedings to set aside the marriage. The court, in the first place, refused, on technical grounds, to set the marriage aside, but gave the complainant leave to amend the bill, in the shape of a petition for divorce. The papers are being prepared, and when the affidavits are filed, the counsel will be ready to proceed, and the decision of the court will be given. Lynden has, by his attorneys, entered an appearance and filed an affidavit, in which he denies the statements made by his father-in-law, and declares that the girl, Ella, is coerced in the action she has taken. He intends, it is asserted, to sue out a writ of habeas corpus to have the girl brought into court and examined in person.

A NAUGHTY WIFE.

She and Her Paramour are Caught Red-handed in Dishabille.

Certain circles in this city, says the St. Paul, Minn., Press of Oct. 8th, were excitedly discussing on Sunday afternoon and yesterday a revelation in high life of somewhat uncommon occurrence in this staid city. The matter was talked of secretly at first and in whispers, but as the mongers grew in numbers the whispers grew louder, and by nightfall yesterday there were very few people in the vicinity of Bridge square who had not heard of, and were not eagerly discussing this latest scandal. The facts of this occurrence, as obtained by a Press reporter with no little difficulty, are mainly as follows:—The party in this certain gentleman, whose place of business is said to be on Third street, but whose name is happily unknown to the public, has had serious cause of late to suspect that his wife was not faithful to her marriage vow. The various little circumstances which pointed to this deplorable fact also implicated the dastardly partner of her infidelity, and the betrayed husband thus for some time been watching for a favorable opportunity of substantiating, beyond a chance of doubt, his heart-wearying suspicions. Sunday last he plotted, and successfully. Himself and wife were regular attendants at church, but on this occasion the wife excused herself from her regular attendance, which seems to be nothing more than the husband expected. He started to church alone, but just before reaching the building stopped and returned home. The front door was locked. He passed to the rear of the house and entered through the kitchen. To a servant girl he explained that he had forgotten his prayer-book, and ran rapidly up stairs to the marital chamber. The door was closed and fastened. Not stopping an instant, he placed his foot opposite the bolt, and with a mighty effort burst apart the fastenings. The door flew open and disclosed the proofs of his worst misgivings. His wife and her guilty paramour stood upon the floor, where they had evidently sprung, both in dishabille. Without a word the husband sprang for a bureau in a drawer of which was a revolver. The wretch who had thus blasted a household seemed to divine that his life was in danger, and he also jumped for the bureau, doubtless intending, if possible, to thwart the deceived man's intention. A desperate struggle now ensued between the two men for the possession of the pistol, the one, desperate in his rage, trying to pull the drawer open, and partially succeeding, and the other, fighting for his life, trying to hold it in. He finally succeeded in closing the drawer and hurling the husband across the room. He then darted through the door, but before he could reach the bottom of the stairs the other had obtained possession of the pistol and fired at him through the hallway. The wretch received the shot in a delicate part of the body. The affair was hushed up as much as possible, but "murder will out," and the disgraceful story has become the common property of the street, though as yet no one who will tell knows or can ever conjecture who the parties to the affair are.

BORN TO GOOD LUCK.

Cupid Prescribes a Full Dose of Love to a Drug Clerk—A Handsome and Wealthy Woman Makes Him a Millionaire.

Another of those interesting little romances in real life has just come to light in Washington. The bon ton are in extacies over it. A dapper-looking apothecary's clerk has succeeded in marrying a fortune of $2,000,000, and now he has gone west to spend it. The facts are:—Six months ago a charming young lady, dressed elegantly, and in the height of fashion, and representing herself to be the relict of a late prominent New York oil speculator, appeared in Washington and took up her residence at the Arlington Hotel. While at the Arlington she one day had occasion to procure an assortment of perfumery, and in quest of that desirable acquisition of the toilet called at the extreme upper-crust drug store of the city, known as Thompson's, which is situated opposite the Treasury Department. Behind the showy counter of Thompson's red-bottle establishment waited an attractive clerk, a young gentleman of twenty-nine, who was no sooner seen than he had conquered. The next day the relict of the New York oil speculator invited the elegant drug clerk to a tete-a-tete at the Arlington.

Thereafter occurs a blank, until the time of the Baltimore Convention, when Mr. Drug Clerk received a mysterious note from New York. He went to Baltimore, there met the lady, was married, remained throughout the convention, and quietly returned to Washington to resign his clerkship and exist without visible means of support. The lady soon followed him there, and again went to the Arlington, where she resided some time, occasionally receiving the fortunate husband, and loading him with presents of diamonds, rings, gold watches, &c., winding up by transferring to him a whole business lot in San Francisco, with the buildings thereon—a very valuable piece of property, of which she herself holds a companion in New York. Next they started for Philadelphia, where the lady took a sudden notion to go west the only notification the ex-drug clerk's friends received of his intention being a telegram couched in these words:

"Don't return. Can't avoid it. Am going to San Francisco."

A letter was recently received from the Pacific slope, containing the information that the young man had started a magnificent wholesale drug store at the Golden Gate. The immense wealth which has fallen to his lot, together with the extraordinary manner of the match-making and the beauty and high standing of the wife, are the nine-days' wonder of the court circles of Washington, and coming on the skirts of the romantic Aulick wedding, has set everybody to asking:—"What next?"—Boston Traveller.

AN INDIAN RUNS OFF WITH A PALE FACE FEMALE.

"Hank Clay" is the name of an Indian known among the Detroit boatmen, but whose original Indian name, says the Free Press, could have been nothing short of Thunder-and-Lightning, or some other appellation signifying that he was up to snuff. Some three weeks since he was found at the corner of Hastings and Atwater streets, so sick that he could hardly stand. The crowd was proposing to send him to the Marine Hospital, when a mechanic named Whitley, living on Woodbridge street East, came along. He ascertained that "Hank" had about seventy dollars with him, and offered to take him to his house and care for him at the rate of four dollars per week. Clay consented to go, and was taken off in an express wagon. He was ill for about two weeks, and received three or four visits from a doctor, but at length was pronounced all right. If one were writing a dime novel it would be proper to say that Hank Clay and Mrs. Whitley loved at first sight, and perhaps they did. At any rate they got up an affection for each other, and one evening looked at one another so lovely across the supper table that the husband rose up in his wrath, and he told Henry Clay to go out into the wide world and never darken his door again. Henry Clay went. He didn't utter a warhoop, draw a tomahawk or execute any scalp dance on the door step, but he got under his hat and got over the threshold.

In the evening of Oct. 19th Mr. Whitley came home dreaming of a cheerful fire and a panfull of snow apples, and he found the house dark and lonesome. He called to "Virginia" several times, but only the mournful yowl of a cat on the line fence answered his calls. He soon ascertained that the wife had packed her outfit into two valises, and that she and Henry Clay had been seen at the Detroit and Milwaukee depot waiting for a train to bear them to the setting sun. He rushed down there, but the train was rolling on, and his oaths and exclamations only collected a jeering crowd. The wronged husband had a brother in Chicago, and he telegraphed as follows:—

"Wife is running away with a cussed Indian! Go at depot with officer to catch her. Kill the Indian and lock up Virginia till I come."

Whether the pair were caught or not has not yet been ascertained, but Whitley sold a watch and some jewelry to get money to take the train, and he'll have Henry Clay's scalp if the stamps hold out.

AN ANIMAL EDUCATOR.

Wonderful Achievements of an Eighteenth Century Scotchman.

Scott Bissett was born in Perth, Scotland, in 1741. He was an humble shoemaker, and, perhaps, no person in modern times ever achieved so much success in animal training. He removed from Scotland to London, where he married a woman who brought him some property. Then, turning to a broker, he accumulated until the year 1780, when his attention was turned to the training and teaching of animals, birds and fishes. Bissett bought a horse and dog, and succeeded beyond his expectations in teaching them to execute various feats. He next purchased two monkeys, which he taught to dance and tumble on a rope, and one would hold a candle in one paw and turn the barrel organ with the other, while his companion danced. He next taught three cats to do many wonderful things; to sit before music books and squall notes pitched to different keys. He advertised a "Cat's Opera" in the Haymarket Theatre, and successfully carried out his programme, the cats accurately fulfilling all the parts. He pocketed some thousands by these performances. He next taught a leveret and several species of birds to spell the name of any person in the company, and to distinguish the hour of the day or night. Six turkey cocks were next observed performing a country dance, and, after six months' teaching, he trained a turtle to fetch and carry like a dog, and, having chalked the floor and blackened his claws, he made it trace out the name of any given person in the company. He was equally successful in teaching goldfinches. After some reverses we find Bissett in Dublin, about 1776, showing his different animals, and again making some money. he purchased a public house in Belfast, determined to give up animal training. Growing restless, his old taste returns, and he commences to train and teach animals once more. He begins with a dog and cat, and perfecting these in their lessons, he selects the most obstinate of the brute creation, an Irish pig, to experiment upon. The teaching of this unruly animal almost wearied out Bissett's patience, and he was about giving up the task in despair when he bethought himself of a new way of taming the young pig. After sixteen months of unwearied perseverance he at last was rewarded by instilling a little reason into the pig's unreasoning cranium, thus proving that pigs can not only "see the wind," by common belief, but that they can be made useful in "raising the wind." During the teaching of his pig, Bissett used to keep young pigs under his shoemaker's seat while he worked. In 1783 Bissett brought his "learned pig" into Dublin, procured the leave of the Lord Mayor for his exhibition, and carried the city by storm. It was trained to be as docile and as obedient as a spaniel, and was taught to spell names, cast up accounts, tell exactly the hours, minutes and seconds, to kneel and make his obeisance to the company, and to various other feats. Like a petty officer, half armed with authority, broke into Bissett's room, assaulted the poor, unoffending exhibitor, broke and destroyed everything, and drew his sword to kill the wondrous animal. Poor Bissett pleaded hard for the chief magistrate's leave, but he was threatened that if he offended any more with his daring performances he would be dragged to prison. Only it was a pig, too late in the era, it is probable poor Bissett would have suffered at the stake for witchcraft. After the break up of Bissett's hopes, his anguish of mind produced an illness from which he never effectually recovered, and he died soon afterward of a broken heart.

REMINISCENCES OF ACTORS.

PRACTICAL JOKES AND DROLLERIES.

Two of the most popular comedians in London are Toole, of the Gaiety, and Lionel Brough, of the Holborn. They are both opera bouffes now, and each may count about four notes in his vocal organ—Toole, perhaps, only three; but opera bouffe now-a-days does not demand voices, so let that pass. Both are excellent comedians, and their names are so valuable in a "bill of the play" that the managers, disregarding the fact that they are not singers, have brought them into Offenbach's tuneful tomfoolery, and as those who can sing usually do not act, a sort of dramatic balance is established. Some time ago the two appeared conjointly in a drama in which they wore very ragged woe-begone costumes, and at the desire of eminent artists in Regent street, they went in their rags to be photographed. While waiting "between the plates," Toole, who is fond of a lark, suggested to his brother comedian to sally out and call upon a certain mutual acquaintance—a stuck-up, pompous sort of person, and who would be horribly shocked at receiving visitors in such a garb. Brough, who is a confirmed joker, at once assented, and popping on their battered hats, out into the street the pair slipped, and made for the house of their would-be-swell friend. "Rat! tat! tat!" went the knocker in a most pronounce manner, and in order to make it appear that the visitors were of more than ordinary distinction, they pulled the bell almost out of its peaceful socket. The house resounded with its tintinnabulatory din.

A neat but flurried housemaid, followed by a boy in buttons, rushed to the door with great anxiety of expression. At the sight of the two cadger-looking men their first impulse was to shut the door in their faces.

"Hey! stop—is Mr. —— in?"

"No, he's not and we don't open the door to beggars," said the maid.

"We've no old meat here."

"Oh! out, do," squeaked out the page from the rear of the maid's crinoline.

"I axes your parding," said Toole, in an assumed tone; "you're making a slight mistake, my pretty maid. We want to see your master;" and he mentioned the gentleman's christian name and that of his wife.

"We have important business with him," chimed in Brough, giving his tattera a twist; "it's awful important."

The girl's face wore a dazed aspect, and she then said: "Master never sees the likes of you at his house. He's most partikliar, ain't he, Charles?" appealing to the page. "You must be making a mistake."

"Oh! no we ain't," responded Toole, with extreme gravity. "But I'm sorry William is out (the christian name of the gentleman); I haven't got a card about me (pretending to fumble among his rags), but when he comes in to dinner, just say that his two cousins from the workhouse called as they were passin' through London."

The maid stood aghast, "the buttons" let out a wild laugh, and the two comedians turned back to the photographic studio to see how the last plate had developed. Toole protests that the mind of that maid will never undergone a carious revolution in regard to the lofty character of her master since the cousins called.

A GRAVE WARNER.—In a Sussex church yard may be seen the following curious epitaph:—"Richard Basset, the old clerk of this parish, who had continued in the office of clerk and sexton for the space of forty-three years, whose melody was warbled forth as if he had been thumped on the back with a stone, was buried on the 20th of September, 1768."

BONES AMONG THE SAWDUST FRATERNITY.

Interlocutors.—What's this you were saying about the "spangled fellers," Brother Bones?

Bones.—I was goin' to tell you what I knowed about circuses.

Int.—Indeed! I was not aware that you had ever aspired to the ring.

Bones.—You indeed! Ben the whole machine myself.

Int.—Ben it subery, I suppose.

Bones.—No; ran it off Pocket country to secure our salaries. Somehow, we didn't seem to strike de right spot, so we struck our tents and moved off in search of somefin better.

Int.—And did you make a strike at last?

Bones.—Yes; de company struck for higher wages right off. De nextest place we come to dere went more dan ten dollars in stamps in de whole township, and when de tent open a whole rash of peoples come along in deir wagons and ax me to take people in for admission. Den I tought Mister Bones will boom along as de ticket-seller, "dese spangle chaps is goin' back onto us. I move we takes possession, anyhow." Jus' den de mayor and common counsel, and deir families comes along, all ob dem wid deir tickets. "We's de nices' folks," says one feller; "what's all dis row about?" "A select set of fellers!" says I, "can't pay for your own tickets. You ought to be 'shamed to mouch in dat way." "You ought to be proud of de privilege," says de Mayor. "Sir! I tole you responsibility. Take it or I'll revoke deir license." "You tole me I'd make money out of dis place," says I, "and you aint tole any greater lie nohow." "So you will make money out of it, for you won't make no money in it!" "Dem respectables may de to run a country grocery," says I, "but you'm de biggest bust ob de lot."

Int.—Served him right, sir, for calkerating his ticket.

Bones.—I took a whole lot of cash from dem, but it was mostly counterfeit coin, and he wasn't satisfied till he'd called us all frauds. Well, anyhow, day all past in and begin cuttin' up all sorts o' shines to while away de time. Dat's better den cuttin' up de benches, tinks I to myself. De music sort of quieted dem for a bit, and de grand star entree took dem by surprise. Den I come in, (I was de clown, you mus' know,) and de first ting I does was to poke run at de mayor and his corpses, cos I was de clown, and dey tink it all a joke; but I hit 'em so hard and de wit got hyin about so fast, dat some ob de fellers in de front seats got mad and commenced breakin' things, and when I left, which was just about dat time, a regular knock down and drag out fight was goin' on, and de contents of de treasury was flyin' about pooty lively in all directions. But it made de show spicy.

Int.—And now our tuneful warbler will give us—

Then Meet Me, Dearest Girl.

When the leaves are green on every tree,
And the sun shines bright and free,
And the golden hue of the flowery lea,
Giving honied sweets to the busy bee,
And fragrance to the air.
Chorus.—Then meet me, meet me, dearest girl,
And in some shady grove
I'll pour into thy listening ear
My gentle tale of love,

Nature's fair charms are nought to me
Unless when thou art nigh,
Thy cheeks shall match the flowery lea,
And thy fragrant lips are sweet to me,
And sunlight is thine eye.
Chorus.—Then meet me, meet me, &c.

"I'LL BE UP IN A MINUTE."

TO THE PROFESSIONAL HABITUES OF THE St. CHARLES, NEW YORK.

BY JAMES W. PERKINS.

While roaming along thro' the street, one fine night,
I met with a dashing young creature
All dressed in the fashion, so airy and light,
A Venus in form and in feature.
We passed by a house in a rather strange street—
She whispered "come, let us go in it,"
Says I "look a here, you are out on the beat,
So attend to your walk in a minute."

I crossed o'er the street to a sample saloon,
Where I met with a chap rather frisky,
Who persisted in howling "up in a balloon,"
And punishing lots of raw whisky;
He gave me some lip, so I lit on his ear,
Which left him fearfully hitting;
He slid out of the door with my boot very near,
Yelling out, "I'll be up in a minute."

Just then a big "cooler" walked into the place,
And laid his fist paw on my collar;
But I soon let him know that I had in his face,
And styly passed over a dollar;
My song may be thin, I hardly can see
How I ever found cheek to begin it,
Still, if you've got any more, I am ready out for me—
You'll find "I'll be up in a minute."

THE TURF.

MARYLAND JOCKEY CLUB RACES.

FIRST DAY, TUESDAY, OCT. 29.

The autumn meeting of the Maryland Jockey Club commenced on Tuesday, Oct. 29, over the Pimlico Course. Sunshine and shade were beautiful, and the attendance however, the paucity and fashion of Maryland being largely represented. The track was in good condition, being only fast, although in the fullest respect it is not equal to the Spring Course.

THE HURDLE RACE,

for a purse of $300, of which $100 went to the second horse, brought out three runners—Lord Lennox, Bonnie Dundee and Lucy Carter. The latter was the favorite in the pools, bringing $200; Bonnie Dundee sold for $100, and Lord Lennox $50. Lucy Carter had no formidable opponent in the former party over both his antagonists, that he was made a heavy favorite, sold to $25 being the current odds on his winning. This he did with ease, the time, 5:20, for after winning handily on the first two hurdles Bonnie Dundee refused to jump any more, and was so be liked by five lengths, Timmany second, and Lord Lennox a bad third. Time, 5:20.

Pimlico Course, Saturday, Oct. 29th, 1872.—First Race—Purse $300, for all ages; a dash of two miles over eight hurdles; $200 to the winner, $100 to the second.

Clifton & Lawrence entered b c Lord Lennox, four years old, by Lexington, out of Lady Maxwell, 147 lbs.....Lawrence 1
Joe Donahue entered ch g Timmany, five years old, by Lexington, out of Lily Martin, 161 lbs.....Gaffney 2
Joe Donahue entered b f Bonnie Dundee, six years old, by Leamington, out of Marguerite, 128 lbs.....Tully 3

Time, 5:20.

THE DIXIE STAKES

was the second race, and was for three year old colts and fillies, $100 entrance, $200 forfeit, with $4,000 added by Mr. M. H. Sanford, and $1,000 by the Maryland Jockey Club, which went to the second horse, while the third received $500 out of the entrance money. Nine horses started, and Count Dorsay was the favorite at 100 to 60 against the field, making the entire stake worth $13,500 to the winner. When Mr. Sanford, at the Inaugural Meeting of the Maryland Jockey Club, last fall won the rich Belmont Stakes with Kentucky, $14,450, which Mr. Pickens, he suggested that a stake should be opened, to be called the "Dixie Stake," for three year olds, to which he offered to give $1,000 out of his own pocket. The idea met with general approval, and the stake closed with ninety entries. The nine horses that came to the post were Col. McDaniels' two, Joe Daniels and Husband; J. F. Chamberlin's Wheatley and True Blue; M. H. Sanford's Mate, A. Belmont's Woodbine, W. Jennings' Silent Friend, W. Young's Brookland, and Messrs. Pearle's Experience Oaks. Joe Daniels had won all his three year old engagements except one, having successfully carried off the Belmont, Travers, Jerome and Saratoga Stakes in consequence of which he was, in combination with his stable companion, Husband, made the favorite at big odds over the field, selling in pools for $600; Silent Friend, $80; Woodbine, $70, and the others as a field, for $110. When the flag fell, after two false starts, they all got off well together, Husband, Joe Daniels and Silent Friend leading, the rest in a bunch, except Brookland, who got off last. Going around the turn, Husband fell back into fifth place, and Joe Daniels took up the running, making the pace hot. At the quarter he led three lengths, Silent Friend second, True Blue next, and Mate lapped on the latter. On the back stretch Silent Friend went up to Joe Daniels, but the latter shook him off, and when he had a length in front, at the half mile pole, Mate third, five lengths behind Silent Friend. The latter kept at Joe Daniels' saddle girths along the lower stretch, and half way up the straight, where he drew away, leaving the latter a length behind, Mate a length at last they went under the string on the first mile, run in 1:44½; Mate still third, True Blue next, Husband lapped on the latter, Experience Oaks and Brookland last. On the turn Joe Daniels increased his speed, and Silent Friend having done his best, Mate took second place, and on the back stretch gained steadily on Joe Daniels, so that the latter was only half a length ahead of him at the half mile pole, Husband third and True Blue fourth. On the lower stretch Mate commenced to quit, unable to live the pace the favorite was carrying him, and Husband became Joe Daniels' attendant. Entering the home stretch it was manifest that the contest between Col. McDaniel's pair would be won by Jimmy Rice took Joe Daniels in hand, resigning the lead to Husband, who, full of running, galloped home a winner by six lengths, Joe Daniels second, True Blue third, Mate fourth, Woodbine fifth, Silent Friend sixth, and Brookland, with Experience Oaks, the last two in the race. The time, 2:34½, was very fast, considering the track, being only three-quarters of a second slower than Harry Bassett's extraordinary effort in the Kentucky Stakes at Saratoga, which is a much faster track. The Confederate Confederacy thus secured both first and second money, amounting to $13,500, the richest stake of the year. The running was very fine, Husband, Joe Daniels, Silent Friend, Mate, Woodbine, Mate and Silent Friend, surprised every one, and none more than his owner, who was congratulated on owning so talented a colt. He has been amiss this summer, and somewhat neglected in his training in consequence, but Jr. J. F. Chamberlin and it was only recently that Mr. Wm. Arnull had got him into condition to run a race. Summary:—

SAME DAY—THE DIXIE STAKES.—A dash of two miles, for three year olds; $200 subscription, $100 forfeit, to which M. H. Sanford added $2,000, and the Maryland Jockey Club $1,000. Closed with ninety subscribers; value of stake, $13,800; the second horse to receive $1,000, and the third $500.

THE PIMLICO STAKES

for all ages, $25 each, p.p. with $800 added, had only two runners out of the five entries—Tubman and Fadladeen, the former starting with the odds of $100 to $15 on him. He safely landed these long odds, for he won the first heat by two lengths in a canter in 1:47¾, and in the second he made the pace so hot that he distanced Fadladeen in 1:43¾, thus winning both first and second money, and making the total won by the stable this day $14,400.

SAME DAY.—THE PIMLICO STAKES.—Mile heats, for all ages; $25 entrance, play or pay, with $800 added by the club; closed with five subscribers; value of the stake, $825. The second horse to receive $150 out of the stakes.

THE FOURTH RACE

was a dash of three miles, for a purse of $800, divided into $600 for the first, $150 for the second, and $50 for the third horse. The entries were Monarchist, Defender, and Flora McIvor, $150 to $30 being laid on the former winning. This he did in the hollowest manner conceivable by over a hundred yards, Defender securing second money. Time, 5:03¾. Summary:

SAME DAY.—Purse $800, for all ages; a dash of three miles; $600 to the first horse, $150 to the second, and $50 to the third.

SECOND DAY, WEDNESDAY, OCT. 23rd.

Continued fine weather, a large attendance and capital racing were the distinguishing features of the second day of the meeting. The track was safe but not fast, for it was deep in sand in many places; notwithstanding which the time made in the two and three year old races was remarkably fast, considering the weights carried in both cases. The victory of Backden in the mile dash for three year olds, not placed in the Dixie Stakes, was a severe "facer" for the backers of the favorites, Sue Ryder and Victoria, for he was so little fancied that every $5 invested on him by the mutual pools realized $174.93. The start in the Central Stakes, for two year olds, was universally condemned as unjust and one-sided, the judges giving Governor Bowie's colt Catesby fully three lengths the best of the start over his solitary opponent, Mr. Belmont's Count Dorsay, an advantage the latter could never overcome in the race.

THE FIRST RACE,

for four years old and upwards, for a purse of $600, dash of two miles, brought out seven runners—Frank Hampton, Freaksess, Panchon, John Merryman, Cadence, Lord Baltimore, and Grace Rogers. The latter was the favorite in the pools, bringing $230; Frank Hampton, $400; Panchon, $35; and the rest bunched in the field, $60. Just before the start, Frank Hampton, who looked in very high condition, came with a rush in the betting, and no more pools was taken for first choice. When the drum was tapped a poor start was effected, Cadence being left at the post, while John Merryman, in the front, cut out the running, followed in succession by Frank Hampton, Freaksess, Panchon, Lord Baltimore and Grace Rogers. Before reaching the quarter pole both Panchon and Lord Baltimore passed John Merryman, and led throughout the first mile, run in 1:52¾, Panchon passing under the stand a length ahead of his lordship, with Freaksess third, and pulling hard. On the back stretch Hayward took Freaksess to the front, and Panchon quitting on the third quarter, was passed by Frank Hampton, who made a fine effort to overtake Freaksess, but the latter easily stalled off his challenge and galloped home an easy winner by three lengths, John Merryman third, Cadence and Panchon the next two, and Lord Baltimore last. Time, 3:53½. Summary:—

SECOND DAY, WEDNESDAY, Oct. 23.—First Race—Purse $600, for four year olds and upwards; dash of two miles; $450 to the winner, $150 to the second, and $50 to the third.

Time, 3:39½.

THE SECOND RACE

was a purse of $800, for three year olds not placed in the Dixie Stakes, dash of one mile. Six ran—Sue Ryder, Backden, Nevada, Wheatley, Victoria and Teetotal. The followers of the McDaniels' stable plunged on Sue Ryder, who won two races in fine style at the Jerome Park meeting, and was aimed by the distance; she sold for $600; Victoria bringing $250; Nevada, $75; Sold, $60. A straggling start was had, Wheatley leading, Backden second, Nevada next and Sue Ryder last. At the turn Nevada rushed to the front, and made the pace hot, leading Wheatley three lengths at the quarter pole. On the back stretch Backden took second place, challenging Nevada after passing the half mile, passed her and led into the home-stretch. Here McCabe called on Sue Ryder, and the filly responding gamely, passed both Nevada and Wheatley, but after a splendid struggle, failed to reach Backden, who won cleverly by a length in 1:44¾, the fastest mile time on record for three year olds carrying 120 lbs. Nevada was third. Summary:—

SAME DAY.—Second Race—Purse, $800; for all three year olds not placed in the Dixie Stakes; dash of a mile.

M. A. Tally entered b c Backden, by Lord Clifden, out of Consequence, 118lbs.....Hayward 1

Time, 1:44¾.

THE CENTRAL STAKES,

for two year olds, $40 subscription, p.p. with $300 added by the Jockey Club, had 23 subscribers, of which only two came to the post—Gov. Bowie's Catesby and A. Belmont's Count Dorsay the former being the favorite at $100 to $35. The horses got off even together at the first attempt, but the rider of Count Dorsay having, by mistake, got the inside position instead of the outside, the bell was rung and the horses recalled. When they did get off, it was to one of the worst starts ever witnessed, for Catesby was three or four lengths in front when the drum was tapped. Count Dorsay made a desperate effort to recover his lost ground, but although he reduced the gap, he never quite got up, and was beaten by a length and a half in 1:48, the fastest time ever made by a two year old carrying 100lbs. There was little applause given when Catesby returned to weigh, notwithstanding the winner is owned by the popular ex-governor of the State, and generally thought an unfair advantage had been given the victor. Summary:—

SAME DAY.—Central Stakes, for two year olds; $50 subscription, p.p.; the Maryland Club adding $300; closed with twenty-three subscribers; value of stake, $1,450.

Governor Oden Bowie entered b c Catesby, by imp. Eclipse, out of Katie, 109 lbs.....Hennessy 1
A. Belmont entered ch c Count Dorsay, by Kentucky, out of Lady Blessington, 109 lbs.....Hammond 2

Time, 1:48.

THE MILE HEAT RACE

for a purse of $1,800, best three in five, for all ages, had only two runners—Col. McDaniels' Tubman and A. C. Franklin's Arizona. The betting was $100 to $40 on Tubman.

First Heat.—When the drum was tapped Tubman jumped off with a clear lead of a length, which he steadily increased to the finish, winning by four lengths in 1:48¾.

Second Heat.—Tubman was again first off, but Arizona quickly collared him, reached with him for half a mile, when she tired, and Tubman won in a canter by four lengths in 1:47¼.

Third Heat.—Arizona got the best of the send off, but was passed by Tubman before they had run a quarter of a mile, and the latter, pulling double, cantered home an easy winner by four lengths in 1:48. Summary:—

SAME DAY.—Purse $1,800, mile heats, best three in five, for all ages; $1,200 to the winner, and $600 to the second.

D. McDaniels and Co. entered b h Tubman, 4 yrs old, by War Dance, out of Lass of Sydney.....Roe 1 1 1
A. C. Franklin entered b m Arizona, 4 yrs old, by Lexington, out of Imp. Rose.....Palmer 2 2 2

Time, 1:48¾; 1:47¼; 1:48.

In consequence of the continued heavy rain on Thursday and Friday, the third day's racing was postponed until Monday, Oct. 28th. The fourth day's racing will consequently be held on Tuesday, provided the weather and track are favorable.

THE CAMBRIDGESHIRE STAKES.

PLAYPAIR THE WINNER.

The Newmarket Houghton Meeting was held at Newmarket, Eng., last week. The principal feature was the thirty-fourth renewal of the Cambridgeshire Stakes, run (or on Oct. 25th, for which there were twenty-seven starters out of 126 acceptances. The following is a telegram; I've the result:—

The Cambridgeshire Stakes, a handicap of 10 sovs each, 5 forfeit, and only 2 if declared out, and 25 added by the Jockey Club; winners extra; the second to receive 20 sovereigns out of the stakes. Betting: 7 to 2 agst Bothnal Green, 6 to 1 agst Laburnum, 100 to 15 agst Barmaston, 12 to 1 agst Salvanus, 14 to 1 each agst Inverock, Bertram and Field Marshal, 20 to 1 each agst Roscar and Sylva, 30 to 1 agst Rudolf, 33 to 1 agst Astrologer, 40 to 1 agst Sir Bertram, 50 to 1 each agst Oberia, Shannon and Protomartyr, and 66 to 1 each agst Palmerston and Cowdor. The first to show in front was Oberia, who made play at her best, going clear of Sir Feverel, Sylva, Salvanus, Hastbey, Bothnal Green, Field Marshal, Protomartyr and Cowdor. In the centre Sir Robert Walpole was also prominent, while Laburnum lay well up on the left, and Inverock on the right, amongst the last division being Roscar, Shannon and Palmerston. The large field kept compact order as they raced across the flat to Choke Jade, and there was no particular falling until they came to the Rowley Mile starting post. Here Oberia gave way, and the running was taken up by Sylva, who held a berth on the right of the course, and was then followed by Hastbey, Bothnal Green, Salvanus, Inverock and Bertram, while Laburnum still lay well up on the left. The pace here began to tell upon Field Marshal, Houghton and Protomartyr, who relinquished their places to Enfield and Roscar, while Sir Robert Walpole soon after gave way, and Revenge and St. Paneras fell back with the rearmost lot. Roscar showed prominently on the right as they neared the T. Y. C. post, but he was directly afterwards in trouble, and Laburnum also at this point began to die away in Gorup's hands. Coming down the Bushes Hill, Salvanus rushed to the front, and soon took a clear lead of Sylva, who was followed down the hill by Enfield, Inverock, Bertram and Bothnal Green. All except the winner were in trouble before reaching the dip, and struggled on with great gameness. Salvanus increased the gap between them at his leisure, and won easily by four lengths; two lengths divided second and third. Inverock was a length in front of Enfield, Bertram fifth, Bothnal Green sixth, Laburnum seventh, Barmaston eighth and Shannon ninth, these being clear of Sir Robert Walpole, Pinsens, Protomartyr, Houghton and Outsider, the last four being Palmerston, Astrologer, Revenge and St. Paneras, these latter pair being beaten fully a quarter of a mile. Not value of the stakes, 1,335 sovs. Time, 4 min. 11 sec.

THE GAME OF CHESS.

To Correspondents.

G. RECHENDER.—The prospect of speedy and voluminous contributions, held out by your note, is exceedingly gratifying. They are sure to be valuable and interesting.

JACOB RESOR.—The sooner you broach that suggested treasury of good things, in our behalf, the better we shall be pleased.

LOUIS GRAEF, Philad'a.—We cordially wish you a most ample success in your new chess enterprise.

P. RICHARDSON.—Your pains taken to gratify our wishes are highly appreciated. Many thanks for the games; one of them in our next.

JOHN G. BELDEN.—You have our hearty thanks for compliance with our request. The games and chess information are very welcome.

F. G. AHLE, Milwaukee, Wis.—Your solutions are correct; we gladly add you to the roll of our correspondents.

DARIUS, Mendota, Ill.—We will look into the solution of Mr. Healey's 7-fold concoction again when we can find time. It is reliable.

CHAS. A. GILBERG.—Many, many thanks. We trust you will see "PAULI" in person before this reaches you.

MATT. O'BRIEN, Augusta, Ga.—Accept our thanks for the attention of sending us the game, and be sure, with such credentials, you are welcome to the long roll of our contributors.

A. TOWNSEND, Newport, Mon.—Ere.—We are greatly pleased with those slips from the Weekly Mail (Cardiff); they enrich a shelf in our treasury, from which we shall cull, to the pleasure of our readers.

A GAMES MATCH is in progress in Philadelphia between Messrs. Jas. Roberts and B. M. Neill, which is creating a good deal of interest. We shall hear further from it, via Mr. Reichheim.

A NEW CHESS RESORT, and one rapidly becoming popular, has recently been opened at 321 North 3d street, Philadelphia, by Mr. Louis Graef. Everything is on the most complete scale of comfort and convenience.

A MATCH BY TELEGRAPH has just been contested between the Augusta, Ga., and Columbia, S. C., Chess Clubs. Columbia played a "French Defence," the game ran to 62 moves, and ended in a remise.

WE PURPOSE commencing upon the "Review of Kling's Chess Euclid" in our next issue.

THE FASTEST BOY IN NEW YORK.

BY TONY PASTOR.

AUTHOR OF "OLD SLEUTH, THE DETECTIVE."

CHAPTER I.

"Look out, Charley, he's got a pistol!"

"And so have I!" was the reply by the lad thus addressed, as he displayed the polished barrel of a seven-shooter in the bright light shed by a magnificent chandelier under which he was standing.

The scene occurred in the gorgeously-furnished parlors of a modern Circe, who practised her fatal allurements behind the protection of an imposing stone front, situated upon one of the most fashionable streets in the city of New York. The origin of the threatened deadly encounter, as depicted in our opening paragraph, was thus wise:—

Charley Page, a handsome, daring youth of nineteen, the son of a millionaire, and known among his hundreds of acquaintances as the "FASTEST BOY IN NEW YORK," had spent the afternoon upon a frolic, or what is more generally termed by the boys "a high old header," with a number of young companions. As a "wind-up" to their spree, they had entered the house of this celebrated Delia. While drinking their wine and joking with the inmates of the house, the party of youths were suddenly startled by the entrance into the room of a young girl of fifteen, whose exquisite beauty shone out in striking contrast to the appearance of the other and older girls.

Charley Page was the first to notice this vision of innocence and loveliness. He was but a youth, but he had been reared amid the fast life of the great metropolitan city. He was keen. He was experienced; a rapid reader of the human face. It came like an inspiration that here was some horrible scheme yet in its incipiency. There was not a line upon the girl's lovely face nor a glance of her beautiful eyes which did not indicate the sacred charm of innocence. He rose from his seat and advanced toward this child.

As he advanced the Circe intercepted him, and bowing with the graciousness of a court lady, said:—

"No, no, Charley. Lotis is calling you—go and flirt with her."

Charley flashed at her an indignant look, and said:—

"Allow me, if you please."

"Why, Charley, what a ruffian you are getting to be," said the Circe, playfully.

But Charley was paying no heed to her. He had already seized the young girl by the hand, who, blushing from shoulders to temples, gazed at him with a surprised and bewildered look, as he said, patronizingly:—

"Come, little girl, I want to ask you some questions;" and he attempted to draw her toward a sofa which stood in an alcove at the rear of the back parlor.

The astonished and frightened girl gently resisted, and attempted to withdraw her hand from his grasp. At this juncture the Circe interposed, and said:—

"Come, come, Charley, you must not be so rough. Don't you see that you are frightening the child. Unloose her, and I will introduce you; and then if you wish to converse with Blanche, I have no doubt the dear child will be pleased to talk with you." Turning to the child, she continued:—"Blanche, my dear, this is Charley Page, my nephew."

"That's a lie," blurted out Charley, fiercely.

Upon hearing this abrupt contradiction of her assertion, the Circe drew herself up, and the paleness of her face shone out ghastly from beneath the paint, as she said, addressing the girl:—

"Blanche, go to your room. Charley's drunk; you must excuse him."

"You can't go, Miss Blanche," exclaimed Charley, "until you tell me whether or not you know where you are, and what kind of a house you are in."

The blush which had hitherto mantled the poor child's face was succeeded by a deathly pallor, as her lips quivered and she essayed to reply.

"You audacious, meddling young rascal!" cried the Circe, fiercely, as she grasped Charley roughly by the shoulder.

A scene of excitement now ensued.

In the meantime, Charley had shaken off the grasp of the mistress of the house just in time to catch the fainting and falling form of Blanche in his arm. Passing her to the arms of his companions, he said, hurriedly, and in a tone of fierce command:—

"Take her out, Fred, and put her in the coach, while I deal with this woman."

The youth took the form of the now unconscious girl in his arms and started toward the front parlor door, intending to pass out into the hall, but at that moment a fierce, dark complexioned, heavily bearded man entered from the back parlor from the rear hall.

"What's the row here?" he exclaimed, as he rushed into the room.

"Row enough," cried the Circe, pointing towards Charley. "That young fop has taken it upon himself to meddle with my business, and has attempted the daring scheme of carrying Blanche out of my house."

During these brief moments a number of the girls had overtaken Fred at the parlor door, and were trying to rescue Blanche from his grasp. Seeing this struggle going on, Charley sprang to his friend's assistance.

At this instant the heavily bearded man, who was evidently a friend of the Circe, followed and drew his arm back to deal him a powerful blow. Fortunately, Charley turned in time to see his peril. As the blow came, his own vigorous arm was thrown up to ward it off, and, in a second, the burly rascal who had attacked him lay sprawling at full length upon the floor.

As the fellow rose to his feet, Charley's companion observed him draw a pistol from his pocket, and called out the words of warning with which we commence this chapter, "Look out, Charley, he's got a pistol!"

"And so have I," as related, was Charley's reply.

The scene now presented was one about as tragic as can well be conceived. By the folding doors between the two rooms stood the Circe, nourishing her arms violently, her eyes glittering, and her once handsome but now faded features distorted by the excess of her rage, making her appear like some hideous fiend. Scattered about the room were the girls. In the centre of the front parlor, beneath the chandelier, stood the two men, Charley and the Circe's friend, with drawn weapons, while just beside them stood Charley's other companion.

Fiercely the two men glared at each other.

"Shoot! shoot! Frank," cried the Circe; but there was something in the mere youth's eye who stood before him which deterred the more mature man from complying with her bloody request. With his eyes still fixed upon his opponent, with his pistol cocked and leveled, without the quiver of a muscle, and in distinct, deliberate tones, Charley said to his friend:—

"Go, Ned, and see if Fred has got the girl in the carriage."

Ned hesitated; he evidently did not dare to leave his friend at such a perilous moment.

Charley repeated his request, when just at that moment the rattle of carriage, as though rapidly driven off, was heard, and the next instant Fred himself appeared at the door. At the beginning of the row, one of the girls had left the room. At this moment she returned with a handkerchief bound about her hand. Approaching the Circe, she handed the handkerchief to her mistress. Ned saw this little manœuvre, and at a glance understood its import. Drawing a pistol from his pocket, he advanced midway between the two men, who had already drawn upon each other, but out of range, and raising it, he leveled at the Circe and exclaimed:—

"Look out, Lizzie! none of that! If you attempt to come that game you go down."

Fred now stepped into the room, and said:—"Come, I guess this little tragedy is about played; you'd better all pick up your guns, sheriff be here shooting by-and-by. I've got the girl away and there's nothing to be gained by bloodshed."

The Circe's friend, upon hearing this statement, immediately lowered his pistol and restored it to his pocket. Seeing this action Charley did the same, but Ned still held his weapon in his hand, and kept his eye upon the Circe. He knew the desperate character of the woman, and evidently feared treachery. Shaking her fist at her male friend, the Circe exclaimed, while the froth actually foamed upon her lips.

"Frank Cater, you're a coward! A miserable, sneaking coward! A full grown man, cowed and backed down by a boy in his teens!"

These words evidently cut Frank Cater to the quick; they were stinging words, and he was not a coward. As he drew his handkerchief across his forehead to wipe off the blood trickling from a little wound, the result of the blow received from Charley, he said:—

"The fear of the law is all that cows me; if that little snob should get hurt, his daddy's money would send me up, sure."

"It's false!" exclaimed Charley; "you're a man and I'm but a boy; but I'll waive all odds and fight you with or without a pistol. My two friends here shall be your witnesses that I invited you to a quarrel. I'll pledge my honor to fire over your head the first pop, so as to furnish you an excuse for shooting in self defence."

"Hold on, Charley!" cried his friend Fred., "you're excited and reckless; this thing can't go any further; you've got no business to have a quarrel with a scoundrel like Frank Cater, anyhow. Come, let's get out of this."

During all this time the Circe was shouting to Cater:—"Take him at his word! take him at his word! you cowardly dog!"

Fred. reached over and whispered something in Ned's ear, which caused the latter to leave the room. Seeing him depart, accused a sudden access of fear in the girl-loving fiend. Goaded and exasperated to a state of utter recklessness by the taunting words of the infuriate Circe, he exclaimed, suddenly:—

"Come, youngster! we'll have this out on the square; let it be a duel beneath the chandelier. Take your position, and one of the girls shall drop a handkerchief for a signal."

As he spoke he advanced to a position beneath the chandelier in the rear parlor. In the face of his friend Fred.'s protestations, Charley took a position beneath the chandelier in the front parlor. In the meantime a handkerchief had been given to one of the girls, who stepped up upon a chair, and extending her hand with the handkerchief in it, said, in a trembling voice:—"One, after a second, "two—three." At the instant the handkerchief dropped from her fingers, and sudden darkness shrouded the whole scene simultaneously with the flash and report of two pistols.

Many a broken head and mutilated face has been saved by a very simple process—the turning off

Introductory Overture.

MONDAY, Oct. 28th, 1872.

On reaching our sanctified sanctum this morning, communing together with our other self, or inner man, so to speak, on the beauties of nature, as exemplified in our street scenery and dead wall pictorial galleries, the first object that riveted our gaze was a legal envelope, in which was securely stowed away a very small note, evidently written with a pointless lead pencil, containing the following startling, if true, information:—

NU YORK, Oct. 28st, 18 seventy tu.
Mundy mornin, 7 P. M.

DERE BOSS.—I take mi pen in hand [his pen was a miserable pencil.—Ed.] tu inform you that I won't be onabil to git tu the offis tu da, owin to havin bin suddently struk with the epizutick, this nu decese which is ravagin the sity like a hous a fire. Sum devil or a wuss man ov the mo in a veterinary surjent, hoom tole me to git sum of mi frends tu give me a emetik. I sort out Sandy Fake, the Mackrilvil Slasher, as wun hoom wus wel noan as a perfeshinal masher; this bully boy semed rite glad to se me, and sed with me hand in hand etc. etc. "Sandy," sez I, "me got the epizutick." The wotf" sez he, as if he dident quite understand mi words. "The epizutick, I" explide, in a confidenshal tone, "this here nu diseas that's a goin round stoppin rale ro les and express waggins and things." "Ah! you've got it!" he askt in a sarkstic wase. "The vere sed I, "tu a welbrated wetrinary surkent sez I must git sum man tu giv me a mash, and I at wunst short of yu, afore the diseas gits tu tur." "Du yu want it now?" he askt in a wa that I had never hurd afore. "I har cum a purpis, sez I, to wone mi pancil kork, and the suner the better." Without no uther wurd, without no more warnin than a child unborn, he horled orf, and mash me rite atwix me 2 ise, like I was a hulkig lest to the slorter. I fel like a wounded dere, for I thot the Mackrilvil Slasher wanted to hav me in on tu me, until I seesed tu exist, as it ware; and I nu nuthin more until 4 days after, wen I found meself in a horspitil, with clothers on me befe, and with me hart beting as yu cood hav herd it tu, and tu wimmin whisperin wurds of peas intu mi ti kled ers. And thats wi I wont be onabil tu be tu the offis this bisey da. It ma be good nuse for yu to here that inne rid of the epizuticks—the mash did it effexshily, altho the dose is a little on the hi sid for mild konstitushin hoom can't stand much medisin. I haint rizn this meself, but is ritin bi wun of the nusses, hoom is a skollar, and hoom sez if he dident no that I was dead sertin by, he wood put it o him. Mi advise tu yu is tu "go west, young man," if yu dont want tu not eskape this onnesary epizutick epperdermick diese hoom is skurgen the world like a pirit of the sese. I am onabil tu rite enuther line. Shood I survive soon, "I will be sho from a mumint." Yourn, til deth,

"OUR JIM."

Of course it is scarcely necessary for us to say that this whole story is a base fabrication, as "Jim" was seen this mornin' (just as well and hearty as ever he was, dressed in sailor costume), with a bran new rifle, left her there Just as well as ever she was.

And when she reached the thronged depot
Just as well as ever she was,
She heard the coming whistle blow,
And got her baggage checked to go—
Just as well as ever she was.

She heard the signal pierce the air,
Just as well as ever she was;
The train moved on, she missed the stair,
Fell! and the great wheels left her there
Just as well as she ever was.

.....There is one thing about woman that we should like to have settled before it goes too far. No sane person can have failed to notice the prodigious height which women's head has already attained, with indications of a still further upward movement. Now this may do very well in the street, or in churches where the preacher is perched up in his little cubby hole near the ceiling, but in the theatre it is different. We allow no man to overaise our pile in respect for woman, but with all due deference to the fair sex we must say that their action in regard to their getting up their head dresses by means of derricks is anything but fair, and shows that their heads, at least, are not level. Why a man is totally unable to see the stage of a theatre now-a-days, owing to these female obstructions; and the only remedy that we can think of is, to dump the women altogether in the orchestra and parquet, and give the men a place by themselves. If the females wouldn't have a battle royal among themselves, then we are greatly mistaken in our estimate of their sweet tempers.....We deputized one of our corps the other day to go sneaking among Niblo's, and attempt to learn what was going on there in reference to the new spectacle and all that. He met the back doorman first, and sought information at his hands; but unfortunately that eagle-eyed official took him for one of those interviewing scamps who are engaged by the respectable daily press to pry into men's private affairs, and publish the result to the world. Although our representative is as mild as a maiden's blush, and as innocent of evil intent as a sucking dove, yet this fiend of a doorkeeper went at him like a hired prize fighter, and beat him into an impalpable mass. On his return from the expedition we asked our representative as to the new piece. "I wasn't altogether successful," he replied, "but I saw stars enough to convince me that it's to be a *sin-till-late*ing production."..... With your kind approval, we propose to erect a few rhymes

ABOUT MANSFIELD.

Thou art gone from our gaze like a beautiful dream,
And London's thick fogs on thy vision now gleam;
Where some other Jim Fisk
May encounter the risk
Of the glances that sharp from thy bright eyes doth beam.
If that should ensue, let us pray that no Stokes
May astonish old Alb. by his practical jokes.
And on what ever stage
That warfare may'st wage,
Thou'lt not make of thy beauty a jest for the "mokes."

.....We will now tell you a little story, a truthful story, founded on fact. One evening, an actor, poor, cold and hungry, entered a hotel on the St. Louis levee. He was the possessor of one carpet bag, which he took to his room, and then returned to the bar, to refresh himself and await developments. Our friend was young, and unknown to fame, having never attempted anything higher than the general utility business of a theatre. There was but one house of amusement in the place, business was dull, and the company was sailing under reduced stock. Our tyro had got down to bed rock. An engagement appeared to be the only thing that could save him from starvation. While he was lounging listlessly over a paper, his attention was riveted by a conversation upon the relative merits of different performers, then in progress between the landlord and his guests. "Talk like you please, gentlemen," said the gambler, "I have a little rig in my stables who, by his Ethiopian eccentricities, is able to do more towards filling the theatre than the smartest actor, great or little, that ever entered it." "Produce your wonder," said one, who proved to be the manager himself. "If he can do that he can do more than any man I have had with me for a twelvemonth." A little, mis-shapen stump of a darkey was quickly brought in, who proceeded to dance Juba, sing and grimace after the usual fashion of the sidewalks, with so much vim and ability that a shower of applause and coppers followed the achievement. "Pooh, pooh!" said the stranger; "I've a boy up in my room can beat that and give your prodigy all the odds he wishes." "I'll bet a gold twenty he can't," was the prompt rejoinder. "Just fetch him along and let's have a look at him." The stranger disappeared, and presently there entered a dilapidated specimen of a negro, of the blackest African type, with a banjo on his shoulder. He went immediately at his work, and in a few minutes had so enraptured his listeners that they had entirely forgotten the stranger, his master. For a whole hour he entertained them, dance following dance, and song following dance, when, so great was the enthusiasm that the whole crowd made a rush for him, and he was raised upon their shoulders and conveyed to the supper room, playing his own banjo, where a capital repast awaited him, and gold and silver were liberally scattered before him. "Where's the master of this prize?" asked our manager, looking round. "Will fetch him, if" was the reply; the new comer had slipped out, and in a second re-entered, displaying the features of the young actor aforesaid, but still retaining the costume he had assumed. "And who the devil may you be?" asked the manager, bluntly. "My name is T. D. Rice," was the modest rejoinder. He got an engagement, "you'd better believe it!"

City Summary.

AT BOOTH'S THEATRE, on Tuesday evening, Oct. 22d, Dion Boucicault acted the chief character in a comedy-drama, from his own pen, entitled "Kerry; or, Night and Morning," then produced for the first time in America, and cast as follows:—

Kerry	Dion Boucicault
Gerald Desmond	George Becks
Blanche	Miss K. Newton
Coldhand	N. Decker
Kate	Miss G. Stuart
Footman	Henry Hogan
Dr. Mellish	A. W. Fenno

The representation, lasting one hour, is confined to one scene—a room in a villa, on the sea shore, in the Isle of Wight—which had been freshly painted by Mr. Witham, and was worthy of his artistic reputation, in the arrangement of the appointments of the scene great taste was displayed. The drama has but a mere sketch of a plot. Gerald Desmond, a young officer of the troopship "Liverpool," is supposed to have been lost at sea, and at the rising of the curtain we find Blanche, his wife, in broken health from grief at his loss. The husband unexpectedly returns, and Kerry, an old servant who had grown grey in the service of the family, and Kate, Gerald's sister, are much puzzled how they shall break the intelligence of Gerald's return to his wife, Blanche, so that her life may not be imperiled by the shock, in accomplishing which the awkward mistakes of Kerry create much amusement. The husband and wife meet and the curtain falls upon a tableau of happiness. It is essentially a one character piece, and all the persons in the cast are subservient to Kerry, in the impersonation of which Mr. Boucicault presents a most artistic and natural piece of acting. That such was the result of the close study and thoughtful analyzation of the idiosyncracies of the English house or upper servant, is apparent. In make-up, the simulation of the tottering gait and trembling limbs of the old servant, Mr. Boucicault approached as high unto perfection as is, probably, within the power of man. His acting, when his young master arrives, and in the very words that the old servant was meditating might some day be spoken to him under like circumstances, was a triumph of artistic skill, as may be said of the scene in which he awkwardly attempts to break the news of his master's return to his almost heart broken wife. But little was required of the other characters. Miss Geraldine Stuart, who made her American debut as Kate, has a pleasing face, a good voice and figure, and acted that character in a satisfactory manner. Miss Kate Newton, who appeared as Blanche, the principal feminine part, acted the character of Blanche, the distressed wife, with much feeling, being at the same time natural, artistic and effective. A. W. Fenno deserves credit for an excellent portraiture of Dr. Mellish, whilst George Becks as Gerald Desmond, Nelson Decker as Coldham, and Henry Hogan as the footman, were quite satisfactory in their respective characters. The representation of the whole of Mr. Boucicault's drama, in three acts, entitled "Oasis Brown; or, The Relief of Lucknow," which was originally produced at Burton's Theatre—afterwards the Winter Garden—on Feb. 22d, 1858. The drama was mounted with freshly painted scenery, and, as a whole, was creditably acted. Mrs. Boucicault renewed the triumphs she had previously achieved in the character of Oasis Brown. Miss Kate Newton acted Ann Campbell effectively. Miss Geraldine Stuart had but little to do as Alice, yet exhibited care and attention. Joseph Wheelock deserves praise for his vigorous impersonation of the Nana Sahib. Mr. Jones was well made up as Achmet. George Becks was satisfactory as Randal McGregor. C. Alexander acted Colonel Seymour creditably, and Penno gave a natural portraiture of the Rev. David Blount. Nelson Decker deserves praise for the care bestowed upon Sweenie, and Mr. Shiel Barry, by his excellent acting as Cassidy, proved his right to a high rank in the profession. The above programme was repeated Thursday and Saturday evenings, as well as the Saturday matinee, and upon the other evenings of the week "Arrah-na-Pogue" was repeated.

AT WOOD'S MUSEUM, on Monday evening, Oct. 21st, was produced for the first time a new burlesque extravaganza "adapted and arranged by James Barnes," entitled "The Three Mus-ke-teers." It is simply a burlesque by the Messrs. Paulton, entitled "The Three Musket Dears, and a Little One In," originally produced at the Strand Theatre, London, Eng., and in the old country met with success. The adaptor has by no means improved it, either by changing the title or the context. A majority of the puns, especially those referring to local subjects, are pointless, without wit, and whatever merit the original burlesque may have possessed has been mutilated or ruined in the adaptation. Miss Lisa Weber was a dashing Queen Anne, and sang the Monarch's song. Miss Belle Howitt and Miss Emma Grattan were effective as Aramis and Porthos respectively. A. H. Sheldon was comical as Athos, and although many of his interpolated speeches had little to do with the burlesque, they never failed to raise a laugh. George Atkins was excellently made up as Lady de Winter, wearing a rich costume of black lace, and a head dress, and a profusion of hair, whilst for his acting he is deserving of high praise. T. W. Keene, on Wednesday evening, acted in a grotesque manner Louis XIII, although L. J. Mestayer's name was in the bills therefor. Miss Jennie Arnot's beautiful face and figure were seen to advantage as the Duke of Buckingham. Miss Pauline Markham made a charming waiting maid—Constance—and the balance of the cast was fairly acted. Most of the music was well sung, and among the numbers deserving of especial mention were double songs and dances by Therese Wood and Lisa Weber; a quartet, sung to the air of Strauss' waltz, "On the Beautiful Blue Danube," by the Misses Markham, Grattan, Howitt and Weber, which was one of the best in the burlesque, and a topical song, sung by A. H. Sheldon, the Misses Howitt, Grattan and Weber, which was encored some half a dozen times. The burlesque was in two acts and proved wearisome, as was evinced by a large portion of the audience departing at the conclusion of the first act. It was preceded by a farce entitled "A Man Without a Head," in which J. J. Wallace did some excellent acting as Mr. Oblivious Top. That programme was given at the evening performances and Saturday matinee during the week, and at the other customary matinees "The Corsican Brothers" was performed. This evening, Oct. 28th, Mlle. Zoe commences a brief engagement, appearing in her usual characters in a drama entitled "The Angel of Midnight."

PERFORMANCES FOR THE BENEFIT of the New York Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum were given at the Academy of Music on the afternoon and evening of Thursday, Oct. 24th. The gross receipts amounted to nearly nine thousand dollars, it is said. At the afternoon performance, after an overture by an orchestra under the direction of H. R. Dodworth, the following named gentlemen from the Bowery Theatre appeared in the comedy called "California Diamonds:" Charles Foster, Harry Holmes, L. R. Willard, Mrs. W. G. Jones, Miss Polly Booth and Miss Anna Mortimer; Signor Padovani, of the Fifth Avenue Theatre, performed a violin solo; Miss Emma Howson sang an aria and ballad; the third act of "London Assurance" was enacted by the following ladies and gentlemen, of the Grand Opera House:—Mrs. John Wood, Miss Mary Cary, Messrs. John Brougham, George Clarke, W. J. Lemayne, George H. Griffiths, Edmund Pierce, Owen Fawcett, and W. Beekman; "Little Fraud" was performed by Harrigan and Hart, and the entertainment closed with an olio by the principal performers of Bryant's Minstrels. In the evening, after an overture under the direction of Herr Wenzel Kuhe, the following artists from the Fifth Avenue Theatre acted "Katherine and Petruchio":—Miss Clara Morris, Louis James, G. F. Devere, Owen Fawcett, Mr. Enos, Mr. Chapman; also, Miss Rawlinson and Mrs. Le Brun, at present unattached to any company; the comedy of "A Day After the Wedding" was acted by Neil Warner, Owen Fawcett, F. Chapman, Miss Rawlinson and Mrs. Le Brun, and Tony Hayward then sang a budget of comic songs; little Jennie Yeamans sang a song; Sheridan and Mack performed their Dutch specialties; Blanche Selwyn sang change and character songs. W. J. Florence made his first appearance since his return from Europe, acting in "The Returned Volunteer," aided by Henry Montgomery, Welsh Edwards, the Misses Phillis Glover, Jennie Lee and Fanny Hayward, and the performance closed with "Box and Cox," performed by Mr. Davidge, E. Lamb and Miss Griffiths. The stage manager was George F. Devere.

THE LAST NIGHTS of "Le Roi Carotte," at the Grand Opera House, are announced, and that spectacle will shortly be withdrawn, to give place to other novelties.

NO CHANGE in the programme is yet announced at the Union Square Theatre, where "Agnes" is still played.

ED. P. WILKS commenced an engagement at the Bowery Theatre on Wednesday evening, October 21st, in a new American comedy-drama, in four acts, entitled "Breakers; or, Summer Life at Cape May," written by J. Neil Fortier. It had been previously acted in Philadelphia, Pa., with success. In point of merit it is far above the average of the dramas recently presented at that theatre. Its dialogue being intelligently written, the language good, the situations well arranged, the climaxes properly reached, and the tableaux at the end of each act skillfully grouped. The character of Burrows, a negro house servant, is not brought into undue prominence, but occupies the same relative position to the drama as any low-comedy character in any legitimate play. Ed. P. Wilks acted that character in a quiet, natural and effective manner, introducing therein some songs and dances, which were received with much applause. Reginald Moreton was acted in an easy and gentlemanly manner by William Marden. W. L. Street's impersonation of the villain, Malcolm Treadway, was thoroughly consistent, and he did not, at all times, betray by his manners his nefarious designs, but artfully masked them under a gentlemanly mien until the exigencies of the drama compelled him to make them apparent. Charles Foster found in the lawyer, Jabez Stott, a character that enabled him to display to much advantage his abilities as an eccentric comedian, and whenever he was upon the mimic scene he kept the audiences in the best of humor. He interpolated many lines referring to local political affairs, couched in language that could not give offence to the adherents of any party, which added much zest to his impersonation. The long experience of John Weaver enabled him to present a natural and life-like portraiture of Captain Forrester, a retired sailor. Harry Holmes' gentlemanly bearing enhanced his impersonation of the fop, Glitter. Thomas Graham, as the negro, Zeke, deserves credit for the care evinced, and during his brief scenes he created no little merriment. Mrs. W. G. Jones bestowed the character of Blanche Forrester with becoming taste, and her acting thereof was thoroughly artistic and natural, she seeming to completely identify herself with that personage. Miss Polly Booth, as Floy Malcolm, did she little that was required of her satisfactorily. Mrs. R. G. France, as Mrs. Somerville Sikes; Miss Annie Mortimer, as Maud Markley; Miss E. Oliver, as Mrs. Forrester; Miss Emma Wheeler, as the Duchess; William Murray, as the faro dealer, and J. Semblar, as the servant, filled out the cast and did nothing to mar the harmony of the entire picture. "Breakers" was preceded on Monday and Tuesday evenings by a farce entitled "His First Peccadillo." Although the comedy was a good one and well acted, it did not prove sufficiently sensational and highly spiced to please the patrons of that theatre, consequently J. B. Studley was engaged for the balance of the week and appeared on Wednesday evening, prior to the performance of "Breakers," in his powerful impersonation of Hans Mathis in the drama of "The Polish Jew; or, The Bells," which was received with much enthusiasm. The "Polish Jew" and "Breakers" were repeated during the balance of the week, Mr. Wilks taking a benefit on Friday evening, and J. B. Studley on Saturday, when, in addition to the performances already mentioned, the Girard Brothers performed their new act entitled "Caperonican." The engagements of both gentlemen terminated on Oct. 26th. This evening, 28th, Miss Johanna Pritchard commences an engagement in her own drama entitled "Auramania; or, Gold Mad," in which that lady achieved considerable success in London, Eng.

THE FIRST APPEARANCE OF NELLIE, serio-comic vocalist and actress, and the re-appearance of Gus Williams, Dutch comique, constituted the novelties at Tony Pastor's last week. Nellie is an excellent vocalist, and her songs were received with great favor, and later in the evening she acted Andy Black in "Irish Diamond," with much merit verse. Gus Williams received a rousing welcome on his re-appearance, and his singing of a fresh selection of songs and the interpolated witticisms evoked liberal applause. M'me Zitella and the Varella brothers, acrobats, who had been re-engaged, continued their graceful and artistic feats. Tony Pastor's comic songs proved, as ever, an attractive feature. Billy Carter's songs, with banjo accompaniment; Harrigan and Hart, in their original specialties, Jenny Engel's serio-comic songs, the dancing of Marie Gorenfo and Malinda Nagle, and a couple of sketches filled out the programme, which attracted an excellent attendance. La petite Benson and Miss Jennie Benson are to appear Oct. 28th.

"LITTLE SWEETHEART, COME AND KISS ME," a new song composed by W. H. Brooks, was sung at Bryants' Minstrel hall during the past week by William Dwyer, and met with much favor. Charles D'Alberte sang "Sunny Days," and Harry Norman a new song called "Mamma, where has the Baby Gone?" In the second part, Leon's Octoroon impersonations continued to meet with favor. Morrisey and Emerson danced "A Barn Door Jig," which awakened considerable applause. Vischeri and Vischeri arrived and charmingly sang by Kelly and Leon. Karl Steele's excellent and artistic performances upon the violoncello were a marked feature, and the burlesque of "King Karrot," which has been much condensed and improved, and in which Dan Bryant and Nelse Seymour now appear to great advantage, sent the audiences home in the best of humor. The attendance has continued very large.

JAMES A. ROOME, who sings sensational songs with banjo obligato, made his first appearance with the San Francisco Minstrels on Monday evening, Oct. 21st., and created a favorable impression. D. S. Wamboid's singing of "When I saw Sweet Nelly Home," and Beaumont Read's "The Poor Little Fatherless Child," were enthusiastically received and constituted the novelties of the first part. Orrin and Hess's acts of the fresh boy and Powers' performance of double song and dance called "The Tom and Jerry Twins" and a sketch entitled "The New Beginners," which was made laughable by the excellent acting of Billy Birch and Charley Backus. The average attendance was fair.

AT THE FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE, "Diamonds" was withdrawn after the performances of Saturday evening, Oct. 26th, during the week "The Lady of Lyons" is to be performed on Monday, Tuesday and Friday evenings, and Wednesday evening, "Fanchon" will be presented, and Saturday matinee, "The Belle's Stratagem" will constitute the attractions.

SERGEANT BURKE, Miss Millie Cook, James Mulligan and the re-appearance of Charley White, were the fresh attractions at White's Athenæum since our last report. Miss Cook acted the character of Chatter, and James Mulligan that of Capt. Cannon, in the farce of "The Dead Shot," presented under the title of "The Unfortunate Lover," and gave satisfaction. Sergeant Burke executed the manual of arms according to Upton's tactics with much precision, and his performance evoking considerable applause. Charley White's acting of Thomas, in a sketch called "The Pleasures of Home," was all that could be desired. The minstrel first part was quite brief, consisting of the introductory overture, "Come Again, Happy Days," sung by Charles Henry; "Candy Shop," by Joe Lang; "Farewell, Jennie," by Carl Rudolph; and "Saturday Night in Fulton Market," by George Coes and company. Lenzi and la petite Benson, Miss Blanche Selwyn, J. C. Stewart, McKee and Rogers, and Ricardo continued during the week.

D. L. MORRIS, Dutch comedian, was the only fresh appearance at the Theatre Comique since our previous record. He enacted in a very comical manner the character of a Dutch justice in a sketch of that name, and kept the audience in a roar during the laughable dialogue during the entire performance. His dialect is excellent, and he is a good actor. A local dramatic sketch by John F. Poole, entitled "Forgery; or, Discharged from Blackwell's Island," with J. F. Crossen in the chief character, was likewise a fresh attraction. Frank Kerns and John Wild created much merriment in a sketch by the former, entitled "Amateur Minstrels." Prof. Acker's burlesque sketch called "Prince Pretty Man." Jake Showles' comic mules, and the Watson brothers, acrobats, continued during the week. This evening, Oct. 28th, the Worrell sisters—Sophie, Irene and Jennie—are to appear in "Ixion."

AT EMERSON'S CALIFORNIA MINSTRELS, Delehanty and Hart's double song and dance performance, just returned from California, commenced an engagement on Monday evening, Oct. 21st. They are excellent performers, and deserve to be classed among the best in that line. They were enthusiastically welcomed upon their first appearance, and at the close of "All Among the Roses" were re-called by vociferous applause. The first part was the usual one, and in the olio Charles Heywood, male soprano, in his specialties, and, later in the evening, in a sketch called "Ten Minutes at the Italian Opera," aided by J. A. Palmer and John Fenick; songs, with banjo accompaniment, interspersed with witty remarks, by Harry Stanwood; Billy Emerson's impersonation of the "Drum Major;" Sheridan and Mack, in their character sketch of "The Golden Wedding," "Playing Hookey" and "The Little Fraud," and a sketch called "That Rascal Billy," performed by Emerson and Stanwood, filled out one of the most pleasing programmes that has been offered in a minstrel hall for some time, and attracted a good attendance.

AT THE CITY CROWDS OF PEOPLE that assemble nightly at the Olympic Theatre prove beyond cavil that the taste for opera bouffe is far from being satiated. The auditorium was densely crowded during the entire past week, in spite of the inclemency of the weather during the latter portion thereof and the fact that the stages had been almost entirely withdrawn. On the first three evenings of the week "La Grande Duchesse," with Aimee in the chief role, was repeated, and on Thursday evening, Oct. 24th, the comedy of "The Grand Duchess" was performed by this company, and was repeated during the week. The opera was well mounted, both as regards scenery and costumes, but the performance was seriously marred by our capricious climate, Aimee and Juteau alone escaping its ill effects. Mlle. Bonelli, cast for Genevieve, was so seriously affected with hoarseness that she could do little more than speak the words of the part. Mlle. Rolland, during the balance of the week Mlle. Rolland filled her place to the best of her ability, although she was somewhat overweighted with the part. Severe criticism under such circumstances would be unjust, and the lady deserves commendation for her efforts. Duchesne, as Charles Martel, was courageous enough to go through his entire role, although the harmony was at times disturbed by his hoarseness. Aimee looked charmingly as Drogan and was costumed with much taste, appearing to better advantage than we have hitherto seen her, especially in the page's costume. She sang and acted the role with much sprightliness, winning several encores during the evening. Gaston Murio, as Sifroy, was all that could be desired. He invested that character with much humor and his numerous songs were sung with gusto and correctness. M'lle Vandame, who supplied M'lle Rolland's place as Brigitte after the first night, was scarcely equal to the demands of that role, being at intervals sadly at fault both in time and tune. Gabel, as the gendarme, was favorably welcomed as he appeared upon the scene, and the duet with Locquer was several times redemanded, although both were suffering from the unpropitious weather. Julien as Golo, Marcus as the Burgomaster, and Berthon as Narcisse, creditably performed their respective characters. The music of the opera is very popular and many of the numbers cling to the memory. Among these we may name the serenade in the first act; the couplets to the pie; the couplets to the chicken; the Tyrolienne, and the gendarme duet. The choruses, many of which are very pleasing, were particularly well rendered. "Geneveve de Brabant" will continue the attraction until further notice. The present opera season will terminate on Nov. 9th. On the 11th, the Lydia Thompson burlesque troupe will commence a four weeks' engagement, acting in the burlesque of "Aladdin" for the first week, and one time in this city, in which they will be aided by an excellent ballet troupe, and on Dec. 9th the Aimee Opera bouffe company will commence another season, appearing in a new opera hitherto never performed in America. On Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings of the present week, Romeo Monest, an infant prodigy only five and a half years of age, who is said to possess a phenomenal voice, will sing between the acts of the opera.

AT THE FOURTH SUNDAY CONCERT at the Grand Opera House, on Oct. 27th, Mlle. Aimee sang an aria from "La Fille du Regiment" and an "Ave Marie" by Gounod. The other artists that appeared were Padovanni, violinist; Mme. Juteau and Mlle. Leoni Lavieli, soprano; Arudnego, tenor; Moriami, baritone, and the combined orchestras.

HENRY M. STANLEY, the discoverer of Dr. Livingstone, is expected to arrive in this city some time in December next, when he will commence a series of lectures, and then proceed on a tour through the country. His services have been secured by a well-known speculator, who is to pay him, it is said, the sum of $50,000.

THE ITALIAN OPERA A FAILURE.—It is now generally conceded that the present season of opera at the Academy of Music is a failure in an artistic sense. Lucca and Kellogg are both excellent artists, but the balance of the company, excepting Jamet and Ronconi, are by no means up to the standard. Vizzani, the tenor, has failed, both as a singer and as actor. Abrandnego, although a better artist than Vizzani, has broken down several times. Sparapani, the baritone, has but little voice, and Moriami, the other baritone, although possessing a fine voice, yet has it by no means under control. Although a large number of seats were sold by subscription, yet the attendance on many nights has been quite limited, and the ticket speculators could not sell four dollar seats in a good location for a dollar apiece.

THE AVERAGE ATTENDANCE at Wallack's Theatre has been good since our last report, and "Pygmalion and Galatea" continues the attraction. Mrs. Foster, having recovered from her recent indisposition, has resumed the character of Myrinie, which she acts in a commendable manner. On Thursday evening, in consequence of sudden illness, Mr. Polk was unable to appear, and the character of Lescippe was carefully acted by Edmund M. Holland.

PROF. VANEK succeeded in attracting to the Stadt Theatre on Sunday evening, Oct. 27th, an audience which filled the auditorium in every part, and his magical performances gave entire satisfaction.

MEMBERS of the B. P. Order of Elks are referred to a notice in another column.

COL. T. A. BROWN, dramatic agent, 718 Broadway, wants two ground performers for a circus going to the West Indies; a violinist, pianist and leader, to travel, and variety talent for Brooklyn. Johanna Pritchard, Augusta L. Dargon and J. Holmes Grover can be secured, for star engagements, through his agency; also Fred. Lubin, wizard and ventriloquist, and Betty and Emily Rigi, danseuses. For further particulars see advertisements.

NEIL WARNER will shortly play an engagement at the Bowery Theatre, acting in the legitimate drama.

"LEO AND LOYOLA" is the name of the spectacle with which Niblo's Garden will be re-opened. Mdlle. Lucca, Diani a prima donna of repute, will play Prince Leo; Mdlle. Rosetta, Princess Lotaria, and Miss Laura Joyce Babette. In the ballet corps, which will be very large, will be found four premieres, Mdlle. Jean Petteri, from the Alhambra, London, Eng.; Kathi Lanner, who will be remembered as the star of an excellent corps that performed some time since at the Grand Opera House in this city; Mdlle. Lupo and Adrienne. Mr. Collard, a diminutive youth with an excellent singing voice, who has gained in London the sobriquet of the "pocket Sims Reeves" will perform King Ko-ki-noor. In the company will be the Misses Kate Newton, Olivia Rand, Bessie Sudlow, Lizzie Kelsey, Millie Cook, Mrs. Wright, Messrs. Ben Magsley, M. W. Leffingwell, Moses Pike and others. Mr. Michael Connolly, late of the Lydia Thompson burlesque troupe, will be the musical conductor. Rehearsals are to be commenced this week.

THE CENTRAL PARK MENAGERIE, Den. Stone's Circus and its Iroquois Indians commenced a series of exhibitions at the foot of Thirty-fourth street, East river, on Oct. 21st, and continued afternoon and evening during the week, attracting a good attendance, the inclemency of the weather being considered. Prominent among the performers in the circus department were M'lle Carlotta De Berg, *equestrien ady will no Baron De Montgtras. Miss Cisneron did well the little she had to do, as Emilie, and Miss Preston was acceptable as madame Del Franchi. Miss Donaldson made a spirited Estelle, and the other minor parts were satisfactorily performed. 'The Honeymoon' will be played on the 26th, and 'The People's Lawyer' and 'Frodine' on the 27th. During Miss Charlotte Cushman's engagement, which begins on the 30th and continues through the week, Manager Henderson's company will play the latter of the above mentioned bills at Taunton, Mass., on the 30th; North Attleboro, 31st; Pawtucket, R. I., Nov. 1st, and Woonsocket 2d. 'Article 47' will be produced here on Nov. 4th. The political excitement is affecting theatrical business unfavorably here as elsewhere. Edwin Booth and company will appear at this house for five nights, commencing Nov. 23d, thereby doubtless forfeiting their rent at Harrington's, which hall was engaged by their advance agent for the same dates some months ago, but which now will remain closed till after election.

THEATRICAL INTELLIGENCE FROM BOSTON, Mass., up to Oct. 27th, forms the following concise paragraph in the following effect:—"After a uniformly successful season of standard comedy continuing seven weeks, the Museum has at last brought out the long promised 'Wild Oats,' with new and elegant scenery, new costumes and every attention paid to the details. Every scene is a gem, two calling for especial mention, as upon them have been lavished the greatest amount of care and painting. The first of these represents the parlor at Lady Amaranth's, and is most elaborately gotten up. The walls are of a quiet grey color, and set with family portraits. The floor is not carpeted, and under every table lies a large, old fashioned rug of patchwork. The furniture is of the high backed, uncomfortable sort, peculiar to the period of the piece, and the generous mantel and hearth are adorned with quaint vases, and near the fire stands an old-fashioned brass handled fire set. A large brass chandelier, supplied with candles, hangs from the centre, which in one act is lighted, giving a very fine effect to the scene. But a mere detailing of the varied contents of the room can convey no real idea of the cosiness, the air of reality, the completeness of the setting. The second scene represents an inn of the period. This has a snug, comfortable look about it, with its plain, homely furnishing, it's inviting bar, it's pretty bar-maid and bustling landlord, the effect of which is heightened by a constant flow of people passing in and out, idling around, conversing with one another, drinking and smoking together, reading the papers, and in fact doing everything people in such a place would do. The acting, on the whole, was in keeping with the mounting. Charles Barron played Rover with a trifle too much extravagance, losing many points by his loud and boisterous delivery, but in the main his impersonation was a careful and excellent one. Annie Clarke looked sweetly in her Quaker's costume—very quiet, but very rich and elegant—and played Lady Amaranth beautifully. Warren as Ephraim Smooth was in his best vein, drawing forth roars of laughter at his nearly every word. R. F. McClannin as Sir George Thunder was very humorous, and Hardenbergh made the most of John Dory, Mrs. Williams as Jane dressed very quaintly, and acted nicely, while J. R. Ring, as Sim, ably matched her efforts. Hart Conway is deserving of praise for his quiet, gentlemanly impersonation of Harry Thunder, and the rest of the cast was satisfactory. The comedy has been preceded each evening by the trifle 'I Dine With My Mother,' in which Annie Clarke is excellent as Sophie Arnold. 'Wild Oats' is announced for all the coming week, and if the houses remain as large as they have been the past week, it bids fair for a long run. 'Early Rising,' an Irish musical duologue, in which Amy Ames and Mrs. Fred Williams appear, will precede each performance this week. 'Article 47' is in rehearsal for early revival....'Rosedale' was played all the early part of the week at the Boston Theatre, and Lester Wallack repeated his fine performance of Elliott Gray. But the attendance fell off decidedly, and on Thursday 'Ours' was produced, and played the balance of the week to small houses. In this Miss Effie Germon did not appear, and we believe that she has closed her engagement. Lester Wallack's Hugh Chalcote is decidedly the best rendering of the character ever given in this city, for he understands the art of being a cynic without ceasing to be a gentleman, something which very few actors can do. If he may judge by the number of failures made in attempting it. His support was again very good. H. A. Weaver, as Colonel Shendryn, gave a very excellent performance, though somewhat out of his line. Louis Aldrich played Angus McAllister carefully and successfully, though failing somewhat in the lighter scenes. W. R. Norton was not a good Sergeant Jones, and J. A. Sullivan was quite at sea as Prince Perovsky. Both Mrs. Booth and Rachel Noah were excellent, and the minor parts were well taken. Last evening, Mr. Wallack's 4th night, 'The Octoroon,' with Mrs. Booth as Zoe, and 'The Irish Lion' were presented. On the 28th and during all of the week 'John Garth' will be played, this being its first production in this city. On Nov. 4th, Charlotte Cushman opens an engagement playing Lady Macbeth, supported by J. B. Booth as Macbeth.....The regular company—or at least a small portion of it—returned on Monday evening last and produced 'The Chimney Corner' as an additional attraction, and as a sort of overture to the burlesque of 'Lurline,' as presented by Lydia Thompson and her company. C. W. Couldock on that evening made his first bow on the stage of the Globe, appearing in his specialty of Peter Probity. His performance of the character, albeit somewhat highly drawn and colored, is a fine one and well worth seeing. J. B. Fuller gave a fine rendering of Solomon Probity in make-up and in every word and action. H. F. Daly was a careful Charles Chetty, and Willis Page a bad John Probity. Mrs. Hunter was a pretty and a satisfactory Grace Emery, and Adah Harris an excellent Patty Probity. The burlesque of 'Lurline,' which has followed each performance and was given for an extra matinee on Wednesday, has been quite successful. Lydia Thompson, as Sir Rupert, was as charming and as graceful as ever; Eliza Weathersby as fascinating as usual as Lurline, and Harry Beckett as intensely humorous as the Seneschal. Willie Edouin's mock ballet is more amusing than when here before, he having introduced numerous new gags in the way of bouquets, etc. Camille Dubois, as the Lady Una, looked very prettily and sang nicely. Carlotta Zerbini has not been in the cast of the week. She re-appears to-morrow evening, however, in 'The Brigands,' which will be produced for the first time during this engagement, preceded by C. W. Couldock in 'Paul's Birthday,' in which W. E. Sheridan, Mrs. Barry and Laura Phillips make their re-appearance. Sothern opens an engagement of a single week on Nov. 4th, playing Lord Dundreary two nights, Brother Sam two nights, and David Garrick two nights. After him come Mr. and Mrs. Dion Boucicault."

AMUSEMENTS IN CHICAGO, Ill., are reported as follows by our correspondent, writing on Oct. 26th:—"Hooley's Opera House—the fifth theatre erected in Chicago since the destructive fire of Oct. 9th, '71—was completed and thrown open for inspection on the evening of the 21st. In a word, the house was filled in every portion. An elaborate description of this theatre was given in the CLIPPER a few weeks since. Mr. Hooley can well be congratulated on having the most handsome and richly decorated dramatic temple in Chicago. The auditorium is nearly perfect in every detail, the walls and ceiling being frescoed in the highest style of art; the line of sight excellent; the seats in the parquet and circle, folding iron chairs, and the balcony circle supplied with sofas, and all richly upholstered. The sofas in the gallery are covered with leather and as comfortable as any in the house. The chandelier suspended from the dome is similar to McVicker's, which is brilliant. All the floors are laid with luxurious carpets, and the ventilation and heating apparatus is all that could be desired. The auditorium is on the ground floor and easily reached through a large and showy entrance, profusely frescoed. The drop curtain—a model of beauty—and scenery is from the pencils of Thos. Moulton and Mr. Strange. The regular officers of the house are as follows:—R. M. Hooley, proprietor and manager; George Miller, advertising agent; W. B. Arnold, stage manager; M. Bierwith, musical director; Noxon and Straus, scenic artists; Mr. Alexander, carpenter and machinist; Williams and Overrocker, properties, and L. S. Beardsley, treasurer. The theatre was inaugurated by the Emma Waller troupe in a comique troupe, who appeared in 'The Three Hunchbacks.' Since the first night the performance has passed off in a highly satisfactory manner, and has attracted a succession of large audiences. As a clown, Mr. Abbott met with fair success, although we think he is somewhat lacking in agility. Chas. Christie does ample justice to the character of Pantaloon, and Miss Barrett makes quite a handsome and sprightly Columbine and Harlequin is splendidly rendered by E. Velarde. The Kiralfys are excellent in ballet divertissements, and are nightly received with much favor. M'lles Elise and Marie Gratz appear in Tyrolean eccentricities and in 'The Cat Duet;' the Jee Brothers in performances on musical rocks placed on a table, acrobatic feats, and balancing, each of which is of a finely executed and calls for loud applause. The several sets in the play are beautifully gotten up, more especially the illuminated garden scene. The dresses of the Kiralfy Troupe are rich. The same bill will probably be continued another week.....At McVicker's Theatre, "Saratoga" was revived on the 21st. Few plays have had a more successful run in Chicago, and it is safe to say no play has been produced in a more elaborate manner than on the present occasion. It is cast to the full strength of the large company, and excellently played from first to last. The acting of Mr. J. O'Neil and W. H. Power, in the characters of Bob Sackett and Jack Benedict, is commendable, while the balance of the cast are worthy of praise. Maggie Mitchell commences an engagement on the 28th, in 'Jane Eyre.'.....Jane Coombs, Charlotte Cushman, Mr. and Mrs. Dion Boucicault, E. A. Sothern and Edwin Booth, are engaged, and will follow in rapid succession.....Mrs. Oates' Comic Opera Company is holding forth at Aiken's Theatre, and are presenting an attractive programme. The performance opens with the comedietta entitled 'An Alarming Sacrifice,' splendidly played by W. H. Crane, H. A. Frost, Mrs. Whitman, the Misses Maggie Glenn, A. Boudinot, Lyon and Eastman. 'A Prima Donna of a Night,' in which Mrs. Oates displays considerable versatility and some excellent singing, concludes the performances. She is well supported by C. H. Drew, J. Howson, W. H. Crane and others. They will conclude their engagement on the 26th, and appear in Quincy, Ill., on the 28th; Kansas City, Mo., 29th, for five nights; Omaha, Neb., Nov. 4th, three nights; Leavenworth, Kansas, 7th, three nights. Frank Aiken will appear as Robt. Bitterly on the 28th, supported by the regular company. G. L. Fox's 'Humpty Dumpty' troupe opens on Nov. 4th.....Mrs. F. S. Chanfrau commenced an engagement at the Academy of Music on the 23d, appearing in C. W. Taylour's dramatization of 'East Lynne.' The play is essentially different in language, plot, story and sentiment from the original, and, as a whole, is an improvement. Mrs. Chanfrau's rendition of the leading role is marked with that womanly grace and sweetness, and rare sympathetic powers which have made her so popular in the east. The support has been of uniform excellence, something characteristic with this company. Katie Wilson and Flora Newton are especially worthy of praise for their fine acting of William and Lucy. Mrs. Chanfrau will appear in 'Dora' on the 28th. 'The Black Crook' will follow Mrs. C. on Nov. 4th.....Mamitt and Bartholomew's Pantomime Troupe opened at Nixon's Amphitheatre in 'Flick and Flock' on the 21st. The place was filled to repletion and the attendance continues large. The company is large and composed of artists well up in pantomime. Mamitt and Bartholomew are ludicrously funny and have few superiors in their line—clown and pantaloon. The St. Felix Infant Ballet Troupe, Rogers and sons, acrobats; Willis Cobb and dogs, and the Garnella Children, velocipedists, are connected with the company. They remain another week.....Mr. Frank Chanfrau has been in the city a few days.....Miss Fanny B. Price is also in the city."

MISS EMMA LELAND, supported by White and Turner's Dramatic Company, commenced a brief season at Columbus, Ind., Oct. 23d.

MISS LILLIE ELDRIDGE commenced an engagement at Kansas City, Mo., Oct. 22d, opening in "Mignon." Our correspondent says:—"The audience was large. Miss Eldridge's songs were both encored, and she was twice called before the curtain. On the 24th, 'Alma' was produced. 'Elde' is announced for her benefit on the 25th, and 'Olive' for the 26th, which will close her engagement. She is to open in Leavenworth, Kansas, on the 28th; at Jackson, Mich., Nov. 11th; Grand Rapids, 18th, and Rochester, N. Y., 25th."

MISS LEO HEWITT and her mare "Black Bess" are to commence an engagement at Providence, R. I., on Nov. 11th.

MONDAY EVENING, Oct. 14, must be accounted memorable at the California Theatre, San Francisco, where "Richard III" was acted for the first time. The audience was noticeable for quality as well as numbers, and was as large as the theatre could contain. It was eager with expectation, for the remembrance of Edwin Booth's Shakespearean revivals of "As You Like It" and "Julius Cæsar" gave assurance that the tragedy under immediate attention would be worthily illustrated with scenery. In this there was no disappointment, and however judgment may have varied in regard to the excellence of the general acting, there was but one conclusion as to the beauty of the mounting. Our correspondent writing on Oct. 18th, says that:—

"No other legitimate play has been brought forward in San Francisco with so elaborate a setting, or with so fitting an attire as 'Richard III' has in the present instance. The scenery, which was painted in England, is correct in drawing and almost perfect in its exquisite finish. It is believed to comprise faithful transcripts of the places represented, archæological authorities and a scholarly research having been made use of in the aim of mounting accuracy. The doubt as to whether it is entirely correct in anachronisms may be passed over, for the ample reason that, to all intents and purposes, it is correct. Every Lonsdale, with its quaint dwellings, feudal castles and gothic temples, its chivalry and consequent pageantry, is reduced in the series of vivid pictures with approximate truth. Nothing finer has been seen on the stage in a long time than the scene representing the Queen's oratory, with its hangings of sacred tapestry and emblazoned shields of stately glare. Want of room will prevent a fitting description of other effective scenes, but favorable mention may be made of Old London, Bosworth Field, Interior of Tower Palace, The Bloody Tent, Old Chepe, Baynard's Castle, Tower Entrance, Palace Hall, Ramparts of the Bloody Tower and Bosworth Field. The same care devoted to the scenery has been exercised on the costumes and armor, and as there are a large number of supernumeraries to represent the chivalry, the tragedy, as a pictorial production, is complete in symmetry. The acting, as a whole, is respectable without being brilliant. All the credit was given in my last there is no need to repeat it. John McCullough has been in fine dramatic mood, and upon the first night his powers were not in the finest order, but during the week he recovered his accustomed tone and was able to give his acting forcible expression. His Richard is not equal to some other of his Shakespearean impersonations, Othello, Brutus, Wolsey, or Hamlet, for instance. The conception is sound, however, and is expressed in a manner entirely free from melo-dramatic rant. The opening lines are uttered in a triumphant strain, a partially fulfilled endeavor is made to give a brilliant address to Richard's cynicism and intellectuality, to render him subtle and plausible in love and diplomacy, his malignant and vigorous nature being revealed only in the introspective speeches, and in the scenes with Buckingham and Stanley. The colors used are not always sufficiently deep, nor applied always with absolute nicety of light and shade, but at all times the portraiture is expressed with force and sustained upon a plane of intelligence. There are those who are disappointed because McCullough does not reverence tradition, and move through the tragedy like a sawing, loud-mouthed bardit, when, in reality, he is to be thanked for his subdued method and strength of repose, which are exhibited without sacrificing intensity. Henry Edwards is a fair King, once, rather more effective in the scene with the murderers than in the recital of the dream. As Richmond, Geo. Chaplin makes a fine martial appearance, reads the prayer well, but is of sluggish spirit in leading the Soldiers to battle. Mrs. Henry Buckley as Catesby, Marlowe as Tressel, and Helen Tracy as Lady Anne, are respectable without exhibiting traits which call for especial mention. Among the smaller parts the more effective are Thayer's Lord Stanley; Meslayer's and Williamson's impersonations of the murderers, Miss Graham's Elizabeth and Mrs. Judah's Duchess of York. It is gratifying to state that the engagement of Mr. McCullough in the tragedy in so beautiful a scenic dress is meeting with an adequate reward, for the theatre has brimmed over with crowds during the week. 'Richard III' will be continued until further notice. The next production will be Saratoga.....The failure of the Bianchi Opera Season at the Metropolitan Theatre has given an opening to the Bartlett Combination, from Australia, to produce their sensational drama of 'Hazard.' The piece, which was a pecuniary success in the colonies, will be seen for the first time this evening, Oct. 19th. The new faces are James Bartlett, Frank Hussey and Blanche Clifton, who will appear in conjunction with Mrs. F. S. Bates, Miss Rabie Lorraine and Mrs. Woodward. Frank Rea and others, belonging to the regular company of the past season.....Mr. E. T. Stetson was engaged to play at the Opera House, San Jose, the week but he did not appear, and the papers there report that he broke the contract without explanation.....Mr. G. B. Waldron has been playing 'Hamlet' at Salem, Oregon..... Miss Magda Moore, whose fine conception and delicious quiet humor formed in the season past one of the leading attractions at the Metropolitan Theatre, will not star through the east with Stetson, as reported in a previous issue. She has, instead, been engaged for one year by Mr. McCullough, for the California Theatre. Miss Moore's talents, if properly cultivated, should possess in the future an artistic worth, and in the exacting work of the California Theatre she will find a school which will do much toward improving and ripening them.....Max H. Fay, the meritorious usher of the California Theatre, was married in Oakland on Oct 10th to Miss Anna L. Chase. He was the recipient of a number of presents, including a handsome gold badge from Thos. H. Blair, the manager of Pacific Hall."

DAVIS & CO., theatrical agents, Cincinnati, O., whose card find elsewhere, are prepared to furnish artists with engagements, and managers with performers, in the different branches of the profession.

LIZZIE BALLANTINE, second singing chambermaid, advertises that she can be engaged.

WILLIAM MARBLE and a dramatic company performed at Sterling, Ill., Oct. 25th.

MISS SUSAN DENIN has joined the New York Combination, of which Edith Blande, Charlotte Stanley and Milton Nobles are prominent members. They performed during the past week at Dubuque, Iowa, and are to play this week at Rock Island, Ill.

LAWRENCE BARRETT, the young American tragedian, appears to be widening fresh laurels in every city that he visits, and he gains the most praise for his performance of legitimate characters, no small compliment in these days of sensationalism. His performance of Hamlet, in the tragedy of that name, in Old Drury, is thus referred to in the St. Louis, Mo., Republican of Oct. 22d:—

At De Bar's Opera House Mr. Lawrence Barrett opened his engagement last night to a good house, and there never was, probably, a more surprised and delighted audience within the walls of a theatre. The play was "Hamlet" and Mr. Barrett made a great hit. It had been some years since he appeared in St. Louis and we all knew he was a good actor, but few, if any, expected to see such a rendition of Hamlet as he gave us. We had got into the way of thinking there was but one Hamlet in this country. We now know there are two, and they are as distinct conceptions as it is possible for two renditions of the same character to be. There never was a more finished performance than Booth's Hamlet. It is refined to the last shade of critical study, but it will not be insisted that it is a type of perfection which cannot be approached by another who may work up the details and approach the grand results in a different way. Mr. Booth's Hamlet lacks that force and fire which proceed alone from enthusiasm and a strong originality struggling for the palm of excellence in its own type. Mr. Barrett's Hamlet also lacks the finish of the former, far surpasses it in fire, tumultuous passion and the quality of electrifying an audience. After all this is the great triumph of acting, and this being so, Lawrence Barrett is a great actor. We have no hesitation in saying at once, rather more effective in the scene with the murderers than in the recital of the dream. As Richmond, Geo. Chaplin makes a fine martial appearance, reads the prayer well, but is of sluggish spirit in leading the Soldiers to battle. Cassidy declined to comply, and assumed the management of the troupe as reported in this issue.

MR. PECK'S series of popular concerts in Music Hall, Boston, Mass., opened auspiciously on Friday evening, Oct. 20th, when Miss Charles Morgan, Miss Anna Mehlig, and Miss Addie Phillips, Myron Whitney, C. Pratt, Jr., and the Beethoven Quintet Club appeared. The second was given on Saturday afternoon, but Addie Phillips did not appear, being unable to obtain a hack, in consequence of the horse epidemic, to convey her to the hall. Further concerts were to be given to-night and to-morrow, but travel has been so interrupted by the epidemic that they have been postponed to next Friday and Saturday, Nov. 22d and 23d, says our correspondent. The first of the popular orchestral concerts occurs on the afternoon of the 30th, when Mrs. C. A. Barry, J. C. D. Parker, Wulf Fries and Carl Zerrahn are to appear.....On Wednesday evening, Oct. 30th, the Boston Lyceum will give a concert in Music Hall, in which Erminia Rudersdorf, Miles. Furnian, Werner, Liebe, Rudolphsen, Julia Houston West, M. W. Whitney, F. C. Packard, G. A. Adams and the Boston Artists' Orchestral Club are to take part. .....Carlyle Petersilea announces a piano recital for Wednesday afternoon, 30th inst., in Wesleyan Hall.

THE BROTHERS GIRARD, comic dancers, hat spinners and original flag spinners, now performing at the Bowery Theatre, N. Y., advertise that they have open dates.

THE LESTERS, gymnasts, can be addressed care of this office.

FRANK HOLT, clog and jig dancer, advertises for an engagement.

FAYETTE WELCH, comedian, is at present performing at Deagle's Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., and can be addressed as per card elsewhere.

DORA DAWSON, double voiced vocalist, is at present performing at the Theatre Comique, Detroit, Mich., where she can be addressed.

FANNIE AND HARRY WOOD, character change vocalists, are traveling through Canada with Cool Burgess's Company.

THE programme last week at Mortimer's Varieties, Philadelphia, had the effect of attracting large audiences. Two stars were added to the company in the persons of Miss Laura Webb, serio-comic vocalist, and Barry Carter, the Irish vocalist. Miss Webb appeared to suit the audiences and was encored in her songs, while Barry Carter, who has improved greatly since his last appearance in Philadelphia, met with a very favorable reception, the ballad of "Sitting on the Stile" being rendered by him in such a style as to elicit enthusiastic encores. Other attractive features were the sketches of 'The Black Swan' and 'The Secure Bridegroom,' by Miss Charley Reynolds was very amusing, and the female minstrels, concluding with the Jardin Mabille dance, in which Miss Mary Fraser took the leading part. Several new stars will make their appearance this week, including Hurley and Marr, song and dance men; Robert Butler and John Foster, pantomimists; John De Angelis, Ethiopian comedian; Melvin Jones, banjoist, and Miss Lizzie Vance, danseuse. The first pantomime ever produced at this establishment will be given this week, bearing the title of "Baked Alive."

AT THE GARDEN MUSIC HALL, Philadelphia, an attractive variety programme was given last week by the following company:—Billy Wright, Charles De Ven, Tony Smith, Mel Kurtz, Master Johnny, Miss Mollie Wilson, M'lle Salina and Miss Sallie St. Clair. Neal Conway, jig dancer, met with a favorable reception on his first appearance here, Oct. 25th. Miss Mollie Wilson, serio-comic vocalist, will have a benefit here Oct. 31st.

BEN. F. BOWEN advertises for first-class talent, a leader and musicians, capable of playing brass and string.

"THEY SAY," in Philadelphia, that Manager Fox intends to convert his establishment into a legitimate theatre, and eschew the variety business. If what "they say" is true, Manager Fox will not exercise his usual cunning. "They say," further, that a prominent hotel-keeper in that city is to re-open that place of amusement as a first-class variety theatre on Nov. 9th. The following is a list of the company:—Frank Frayne, actor and stage manager; Miss Clara Butler, serio-comic vocalist; Bertha and Ida Foy, song and dance: Messrs. Courtright and Gilbert, song and dance; Charles Brown, Ethiopian banjo soloist, etc.; Mathews and Celeste, gymnasts; Dr. A. S. Kennedy, straight business and old man in darkey sets; Little Ella Cori, danseuse; W. H. C. Andrews, heavy man; George Redmond, Charles E. Eldridge, Harry Butcher and Clara Day.

THE OLYMPIC THEATRE, Brooklyn, L. I., has presented sufficient attraction to draw remunerative audiences during the week ending Oct. 26th, the stars being Whalley, the noted melodramatic actor, and Jester, the sensational ventriloquist. Both appear this week.

AT THE VARIETIES THEATRE, Indianapolis, Ind., the following performers are announced to appear Oct. 28th:—Miss Celia Berry, operatic vocalist; the Lopez family, acrobats; George Manken, contortionist; Jennie Eagan, Josie Farran, Mlle. Olivia and Maud Howard, dancers; Fanny Mordaunt, vocalist; la petite Flora, child artist; Charles Hanlin, general performer, and Will. H. Stone, Ethiopian comedian.

THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Richmond, Va., closed on Oct. 21st. A performance, so called, was attempted on the 23d, when Mr. Gayton offered an excuse for the non-appearance of Tim Morris, who was billed to appear and said Joe Mack would play on both ends in the first part. That gentleman attempted it by running first from one end to the other of the stage. The whole thing was so ludicrously ridiculous, that it can be better imagined than described. The place remains closed. So wrote our correspondent on Oct 26th.

AT THE NEW HAVEN, CONN., OPERA HOUSE, Henry Devernell, contortionist, put in an appearance on Oct. 24th, and on the 28th. Alf. Miles, song and dance; Victoria Rose, fancy dancer, and Henry W. Morton, Irish comedian and vocalist, are to appear.

AT THE OPERA HOUSE VARIETIES, Williamsport, Pa., the chief features the past week were Billy Pash, banjoist; Miss Morandi, serio-comic; Ella Arnold, Allie and Nora Stone, Tommy Haywood, comedian; Johnny Fisher, character comedian; Charles Lee, Harry Armstrong and Tom Huff.

AT LOONEY'S VARIETIES, St. Louis, Mo., Green and Saddler met with a good reception on the occasion of their appearance in their Ethiopian comicalities. Clark Gibbs put in a re-appearance, and was warmly received. The business has been fair. Four new faces are announced for Oct. 28th, viz:—Jimmy Gilroy, comedian; Cal. Mandeville, comique; Mlle. Cecile and Miss Maggie Maguire.....At the National Theatre, Dave Williams, among the first appearances, was satisfactory in his banjo selections. Kate Delmar, as a jiggist, was fair only. Gilfoil and Rourke continue here, without a likelihood of departure, as their favoritism stands hearty wear. Miss Sophie Gordon appeared as the new star the first week. The Matthews Family give an excellent entertainment, consisting of singing, dancing, dramatic dialogue and acrobatic feats. Master Willie is a versatile performer of uncommon merit, considering his age. The performances of the entire family evoke universal applause. Arthur Gregory and Theodore Matthews do a bar act that almost challenged superiority in its general details. The former is an accomplished danseuse, and appears in a transformation dance of some thirteen changes, effected during an incredible short absence from the stage. Patti Rosa is a danseuse and vocalist of merit. Rosa Lee appears to advantage as a vocalist, and Lillie Hall in a song and dance, 'The Girl with the Curl," which is accorded an encore. The gallery gods assist Billy Pastor in singing the chorus of his song "Down in a Coal Mine," and the effect is very ludicrous. "The Ku-Klux Klan" concludes the entertainments. The Matthews family remain next week, and Lucy Adams and others open on the 28th inst.

AT THE VARIETIES THEATRE, Pittsburgh, Pa., James Taylor, Miss Alexandra, Mlle. Gracie and the Huntings are the recent arrivals. All of the new comers received a hearty welcome on their first appearance, a liberal attendance, and up to present writing, Oct. 25th, says our correspondent, "business continues good. Mr. Taylor appears in his characteristic impersonations of 'Yorkshire Sam,' 'Simple Simon,' 'The Broken Hearted Lover,' 'Old Sarah Walker,' etc., and is enthusiastically applauded. Miss Alexandra is a vocalist of fine abilities, and her extensive costume effects are elicited by a mid-air suspension, entitled 'The Aerialist's Dream,' performed by Mlle. Gracie and James Taylor, is one of the conspicuous and novel features of the programme. The Huntings, Robert and Claresse, are excellent gymnasts, accomplishing their trapezs act with agility, grace and daring, evoking hearty applause. Harry Canaland, Minnie Gray, Adele Hunting, Lizzie Gardner, Lucy Clifton, H. W. Williams, Charley Brown and George S. Knight appear, in conjunction with the fresh acquisitions, the performance concluding with the comic drama of 'Champagne and Sugar,' with Miss Lucy Clifton in the leading role. The Zanfretta Pantomime Troupe and Dan and Joey Morris will be among the new people on the 28th inst."

CINCINNATI NEWS, up to October 25th, is given as follows by our correspondent:—"Rainy nights have made a dull week at all the halls. At the Race Street Varieties the only new comer has been Fred D. Harris, whose character songs and ballads are good. He fills the position of interlocutor. The Can-can has again been put on as a wind-up, with Mlle. Helena as the naughty Queen, Kerry Morton and Johnny Weaver do a funny act, somewhat new, called 'Manager in Bad Luck,' and the rest of the boys and girls sing and dance as usual. The Misses Jennie Eagan and Josie Farren, a brace of nice little dancers, close a four days' stay to-morrow, going to Indianapolis. Lotta Georgia also winds up, having engaged at the Pacific Garden. Manda Baker, song and dance, commences Monday, the 28th.....At the Pacific Garden the new appearances, since last writing, have been Billy Hasson and Sadie Hasson (nee Laura Delano). Hasson is a good Ethiop, and the lady vocalizes very well. Dan Morris and Josie Morris, the popular Dutch and Irish comiques, close to-morrow, going to Pittsburgh. Harry Bloodgood and Jemmy Dalton have closed. Joe Moll, Johnny Clarke, Tommy Dayton, Pete Grady, the Ashton brothers and Gussie Keating remain. Lotta Georgia is to appear on the 28th .....At the Olympic, the new people since last report have been Millie Basoure, vocalist; Fred. Byron and Lizzie Byron, vocalists and change artists, and Harry Gardner, comedian. The farce of 'Forty Winks' has been the main feature of the programme, with Charles La Porte as Horatio Sprezgins, supported by Harry Gardner, James Davis, Millie Hanley, Fred. Byron, Millie Basoure, Emma La Porte and Lizzie Byron. Gardner closes this week. Harry Wilkinson, banjoist, and Jimmy Dalton, comedian, appear on the 28th.....At the Sycamore Street Varieties the only addition has been Prof. John Poland, fire swallower. Molly St. Martins and Emma Barrett closed Saturday and went to Nashville. .....H. Kohlbrandt, proprietor of the Pacific, has turned the old Apollo Hall into a large restaurant and bowling alley, which he opens to-morrow."

AT SHELBY'S COMIQUE, Buffalo, N. Y., wrote our correspondent on Oct. 26th:—"A repetition of former reports—packed houses—may be stated of the business during the past week. No new stars appeared on the 21st, the excellence of the previous company warranting its retention. The Clodoches appeared in a pantomime called 'The Greedy Clown' successfully. A new act was produced called 'The Female Bluebeard,' with Jack Kennedy, and with him and others rendered in good style. 'The Arrival of Fred Douglass' was another comical effort, produced for the first time. The Clodoches close on the 25th. Sidney Franks and Pedanto open on the 28th, which will be the last week of the season. Mr. Harry Wells, the popular leader of the orchestra, is up for a benefit Nov. 1st."

ANNIE ADAMS and some other professionals presented the proprietor of the St. Charles Hotel, Boston, Mass., with a marble clock on Oct. 26th.

AT BROOK'S OPERA HOUSE, Memphis, Tenn., an almost new company appeared during the past week, only two of the old remaining, Miss Lizzie Lamereaux, vocalist soubrette, and Mlle Albertina, danseuse. The new people are Miss Emily Tremont, operatic vocalist; Sprague and Mack, song and dance men; Mons. Reveni, "the flying man of the air;" Mlle Zoe Zeonetti, trapezist; Misses Kitty Whitland, Mollie Macey, Minnie Seamon and Delia Smith, vocalists; and Charley Seamon, jiggist and comedian. The programme presented each evening is very attractive and has drawn well.....At the Olympic business also is very good. The only new appearances are J. A. Whittony, Antonetti Vico and Lisa Lynn, all of whom are very fine in their line of business. Manager Charley White has a splendid company and gets up a good programme nightly. So wrote our correspondent on Oct. 26th.

THE NEW ARRIVALS at the Front street Theatre, Baltimore, Md., on Oct. 21st, were the Carroll family, Helene Smith, and Sallie Maedn. The Carrolls are three midgets called Little Dick, the General, and Master Eddie, who did Dutch and negro acts with such precocious cleverness as to provoke the most tumultuous merriment. Miss Helene Smith, dancer and serio-comic vocalist, dances neatly and gracefully, possesses a clear, though not powerful voice, and her style is marked with delightful dash. Miss Sallie Mason, vocalist and actress, is acceptable in anything she undertakes, and being an old favorite here, met with an enthusiastic welcome. Business has been quite satisfactory. Austin and Hess close on the 26th. Martha Wren, James Collins and Mlle. Pauline are underlined for the 28th.....The fresh appearances at the Baltimore Opera House were Lew Spencer, a clever Dutch comedian; Mlle. Henrietta, jig and song and dance lady; Billy Collins, an acceptable Ethiopian and Teutonic performer; Miss Lizzie Barrett, a dashing serio-comic, and Harry Price, a very reliable negro delineator. The last two are old favorites here. Prof. George Nachman deserves mention for the creditable manner in which he conducts the orchestra. The audiences have been only fair. Emerson and Granger, Della Gonzalez, Annie Hindle, Lew Spencer and M'lle Henrietta close the 26th. Amanda Lee is announced to appear on the 28th.....The principal features in the programme at the Odeon Varieties were the excellent jigs and clog dancing of Mollie Wilson, the Maggie Bowers' ever popular arias and ballads; songs and dances by Miss Lizzie Johnson; fancy dances by Miss Annie Harrison; double clog dances and negro acts by Masters Paul and Bob, and Ethiopian personations by Dan Howard, Dick Gorman and Jim Fiske. The attendance has been some what moderate. Dan Howard and Lizzie Johnson close Oct. 28th, the latter going to Williamsport, Pa. Tommy Jefferson and Laura Graham are billed for the 28th, wrote our correspondent on Oct. 26th.

AT FIELDING'S OPERA HOUSE, Toledo, O., the attendance during the past week has been large. Lou Francis, banjoist, and-serio comic vocalist; Maud Howard, danseuse, and Johnny Reeves, Ethiopian comedian, were the new arrivals. Miss Francis possesses a pleasing face and figure, an excellent voice, and was speedily installed as a favorite. Miss Howard,

AMUSEMENTS.

TO THE PROFESSION.

I would respectfully notify those parties who are now singing any of the new "Lingard Sketches," that I have sold the following sketches (words, music, business, inventions, etc.) to Mr. Wm. Hain Horace Lingard, viz.:—"The N. G. S. N. Y.," "Sailing in the Mountains," "Happy Daddy," "Riding the Baby (or "Little French Nurse"). Also the words and music of the following sketches, whose titles were suggested by Mr. Lingard, viz.:—"Five Times a Wife," "I'm Little, but I'm Good," "Would You," etc. To Mr. Lingard, therefore, belongs the sole right of production. It is hoped that performers will govern themselves accordingly. CHAS. CONNOLLY (Mark Quencher), Song Writer. [31-1t

BARNUM'S CIRCUS

In your issue week before last you stated that the Older Show would go south this winter, under the name of the Barnum show, an arrangement to that effect having been made with Mr. Barnum for the use of his name. This is a mistake. Mr. Barnum has not sold his name to Mr. Older, nor anybody else, neither will he do so. The show that goes south this winter under the name of "The Barnum Show," is owned and controlled by Mr. P. T. Barnum, and is composed in part of the most attractive features of his great traveling show, which has been attracting such enormous multitudes throughout the West the past summer, together with such additions as Mr. Barnum is constantly making to ALL his exhibitions. The "Prince" is very much of a showman, and quite able to equip and engineer several mammoth concerns, it he should desire, and the public can always depend that excellence and superiority will characterize whatever enterprise the name of P. T. Barnum is associated with. The show is officered as follows:—P. T. Barnum, Proprietor; W. C. Coup, Manager; W. E. McLean, Asst.; J. M. Chandler, Gen'l Ag't; F. A. Alexander, Contracting Ag't; William S. Pease, Press Ag't; C. C. Pell, Railroad Contractor; Frank Sterns, Treasurer.

CAUTION.

THE LULU SENSATION.

Observing an advertisement in the New York Clipper announcing that W. F. Prescott, master machinist of the Boston Theatre, Boston, United States, is prepared to furnish the apparatus for this sensational act, we hereby give notice that the apparatus was invented by Signor Farini, and has been patented by him in every part of Europe, in the United States of America and Canada. The name and title of LULU is also registered in those countries, and cannot legally be used by any other person than the original artiste of that name. A power of attorney to prosecute all offenders has been forwarded to New York, and the rights of the inventor and patentee will be rigidly enforced. Signor Farini will shortly arrive in the United States with the original and only LULU.

NEW ATHENÆUM,

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

ON THE GROUND FLOOR FACING THE CAPITOL.

Ample and Elegant Auditorium, with Dress Circle and Boxes of the Best Style and Construction. Stage 50x60, fully Stocked with New Scenery.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS TO THE PROPRIETOR.

* * * * its accoustics are excellent, and Mlle Nilsson and all the members of my troupe are very much pleased with it. MAX STRAKOSCH.

Yours, very truly,

* * * You have certainly given the Columbus people the best furnished and finished stage and appointments they have ever seen in their own city, while the auditorium must prove as advantageous respecting capacity of sight, ventillation, warmth, &c., as any community can desire. Yours, truly, JOHN A. ELLSLER.

* * * * If I should again visit Columbus, I should most assuredly endeavor to play in your house again. The situation is most excellent, and in every way desirable for a first class entertainment.

Yours, very sincerely, MARK SMITH.

* * * * I take great pleasure in recommending the new Athenæum as being infinitely the best Theatre, both as regards location and accessories, in the city of Columbus, having given both houses a fair and impartial trial. Our business here I consider immense.

Yours, sincerely,
FRANK P. DOBSON, Manager Wallace Sisters.
